

Dear Chairman Martin:

I am writing to express my opinion concerning two important issues. The most important is that some of the telecommunications companies have been readily giving our personal information to government eavesdroppers. It's easy to say the fallout shouldn't affect me personally because I am a patriotic American but it might so I am adamantly opposed to this kind of egregious compliance and complicity by these companies.

Second is keeping the internet free of control by any telecommunication and cable company, large or small. I was raised under the Bell system, which was broken up by the government because of antitrust. Now I wonder why these companies would be allowed to merge together and how they can do so w/o violating antitrust laws but that's for you and the FCC to ascertain.

Sincerely,

Allen A Fowler
