

Ending states ability to regulate Do Not Call programs is unethical and frankly violates the states right to govern themselves. If citizens of a state agree to insitute such a list, it should not be over-ruled by the FCC. It is our state, our phone lines and our lives. If telemarketers were a little more selective in when they call, how they approach the call maybe a compromise could be reached. However, keeping a complete blockade saves my children and myself the agony and anger of dealing with this utter intrusion into my private life.
