

I encourage the commission to provide additional spectrum for the use of new medical devices that are now in use or soon will be. Technology has made, and will continue to make the lives of millions of disabled United States citizens more productive and less costly to society by keeping them in the mainstream. Many of these technologies monitor data that is paramount in keeping the disabled person in the mainstream. Wireless monitoring technologies have the potential to save money for the individual, the medical providers and society. Thank you for providing the opportunity for comment.
