

For the government to extend its control of anything that is not already under control by the government is adding insult to injury. Just one of the things that separates the U.S.A. from all other nations is based (like all the other things that make America unique) on freedom. Why would the government deprive the viewing public of the freedom to watch what it wants to watch...unless the intention is to promote walking in lock step with the government's guidelines? A word that comes to mind is "brainwashing.") Please devote your energies to promoting competition and choice in the marketplace of ideas.
