

Access to information for the general public is vital in a democracy. Most Americans get their information through television, newspapers, and the internet. My television and internet here in Arizona is provided by Cox and when I was in California, it was provided by Comcast. For highspeed internet and cable, what were my choices ? The rates that they charge are outrageous and should be strigently regulated. In this anti-regulation environment, if this bill will give the public more choices and reduce the costs, I am for it.

Sincerely, Dan Hudson
