Hi, Pam. Another one. Thanks, s.

FCC,

I am writing to you on concern about Closed Captioning for severe weather coverage. This is a very serious issue that need to be addressed and something must be done immediately. When deaf people are watching a sudden coverage of severe weather, we do not have any immediate information to better prepare ourselves. As you know, severe weather can strike anywhere within a matter of minutes and a tornaic storm can drop down a tornado at any time. Without CC, it would be a major delay for people with hearing loss to know whats happening every minutes. Since the FCC does not enforce the stations to provide emergency captioning, most stations will not provide captioning to protect lives. The risk especially increases when a person have to go outside to keep watch of the weather and run back into the house to look at the TV.

When I watch several stations at the same time during severe weather coverage, without captioning, I have no information on where a specific tornado is at and the direction. Everything is happening so fast and everything is delayed for us. This is serious! It could be too late to take cover at the very last minute.

There is one station, KFOR-TV Channel 4 in Oklahoma City, provides captioning during severe weather, but there are flaws. It takes the station about 15 to 30 minutes to get the captioning started. Each time there is a severe weather coverage, I have to call the station constantly to remind them not to forget about the captions. If no one calls them, they will mostly forget. Another flaw, the station only provide captioning when the severe storms approaches nearer to the metro area. This is unacceptable. We want captioning immediately, despite the location of the storms in the state. We have deaf friends and family that live across the state. They would want captioning as well and we need captioning to know specific details to be able to alert our friends and family.

Another thing, a 30 minutes delay is a great risk to everyone with hearing loss. We demand that the station provide Captioner to be on standby on days that is forecasted to have severe weather. As soon the coverage begins, we want the captions to begin immediately as well.

A single storm cell can explode over a city and drop a tornado within 15 minutes. In that city alone, there are populations with deaf citizens. When everything happens quickly and the captions are not ready, it will be a disaster.

Also, providing breaks to a Captioner during severe weather coverage must be adjusted. I do not like it when a Captioner takes a break for several minutes. If one captioner need a few minutes rest, then another captioner must be ready to take over immediately.

I've been working with 3 stations in Oklahoma City and I am pushing for a improvement in all three stations. Please, I ask the FCC to help join the fight with all the Americans with hearing loss. FCC can begin to save lives and help people to be better prepared by enforcing the stations to provide emergency captioning and to enforce the stations that provide emergency captioning to improve.

Dear Thomas Chandler,

The FCC clarification of the emergency captioning requirements was wrong. All emergency information must be captioned with no exceptions. I must be aware of emergency situations such as a terror alert or impending natural disaster.

I support the Application for Review of Clarification of Obligation of Video Programming Distributors to Make Emergency Information Accessible to Persons with Hearing Disabilities Using Closed Captioning, sent by seven national consumer organizations on August 14, 2006, CG-Docket # 05-231.

Thomas Chandler

Dear Thomas Chandler,

The FCC clarification of the emergency captioning requirements was wrong. All emergency information must be captioned with no exceptions. I must be aware of emergency situations such as a terror alert or impending natural disaster.

I support the Application for Review of Clarification of Obligation of Video Programming Distributors to Make Emergency Information Accessible to Persons with Hearing Disabilities Using Closed Captioning, sent by seven national consumer organizations on August 14, 2006, CG-Docket # 05-231.

Sincerely,
