SUMMARY

Nexstar Broadcasting, Inc. (“Nexstar”) and virtually every other small and medium market television broadcaster are in agreement that it is well past time for the Commission to relax or repeal its local television ownership rule, in order to provide real and necessary regulatory relief to medium and small market television broadcasters. In their opening comments, Nexstar and other small market broadcasters provide the Commission with extensive evidence regarding the state of today’s hypercompetitive media marketplace, which has produced massive challenges for these broadcasters as they struggle to survive, let alone provide their local communities with news and other local programming.

Despite this plethora of evidence, other commenters object to the Commission providing medium and small market television broadcasters with regulatory relief. These parties object to such relief for a variety of unfounded reasons, including complaints about reduced local programming, a decline in stations’ journalistic standards, fear of corporate bias and a desire to regulate non-ownership matters through the Commission’s ownership rules. These parties also twist facts to support the absolutely false premise that the television broadcast industry is financially healthy and that medium and small market broadcasters are simply seeking to earn greater profits at the expense of their local communities.

The Commission should recognize these irrational fears for the mere speculation and conjecture that they are. Medium and small market television broadcasters will continue to provide diverse, quality local programming if permitted to own two stations in a market because only with diverse programming can such broadcasters reach the widest possible audience and maximize their revenues. The Commission also should ignore the call to use its broadcast ownership rules as a means to regulate in other areas.

Medium and small market television broadcasters who own no other in-market media outlets are not Big Media. Indeed, these broadcasters provide an antidote to Big Media and should be encouraged to survive and continue producing quality local programming for their communities. If the Commission is serious about preserving localism and local programming, the Commission should relax or eliminate its local TV ownership rule and permit medium and small market television broadcasters to own two stations in a market.

REPLY COMMENTS OF NEXSTAR BROADCASTING, INC.

Nexstar Broadcasting, Inc. (“Nexstar”), by its attorneys, respectfully submits these reply comments in the above-captioned proceeding.<sup>1</sup> On October 23, 2006, Nexstar submitted comments in this proceeding providing the Commission with compelling evidence that the Commission should eliminate the top-four ownership restriction (the “Top-Four Restriction”) in <sup>1</sup> Nexstar owns 29 full-power broadcast stations located in medium and small markets. Nexstar also provides services to stations that other companies own in fifteen of its markets through various agreements.

the local TV ownership rule and permit television broadcasters who own no other in-market media interests to own two television stations in the same market regardless of station rank. Nexstar urged the Commission to make this change to its rules in order to strengthen and preserve local television in medium and small markets. Nexstar herein responds to the comments submitted by other parties with respect to the local TV ownership rule, Section 73.3555(b) of the Commission's rules.

I. INTRODUCTION.

On October 23, 2006, Nexstar submitted comments addressing certain questions raised in the Commission's Further Notice of Proposed Rulemaking ("FNPRM") (FCC 06-93, released July 24, 2006), wherein the Commission is seeking to determine whether its broadcast ownership rules remain necessary in the public interest. In its comments, Nexstar informed the Commission that the current local TV multiple ownership rule (which the Commission adopted in 1999) and the proposed local TV multiple ownership rule (which the Commission adopted in 2003) (collectively the "Local TV Ownership Rule") discriminate against medium and small market television broadcasters who hold no other media interests, relegating such companies to second class media citizens, struggling to survive in today's hypercompetitive media environment. Nexstar provided the Commission with extensive information about the challenges facing medium and small market television broadcasters today, including information about the increasingly competitive media marketplace, decreasing station revenues, and ever-increasing station operating costs, particularly the costs associated with local news programming and the transition to digital broadcasting. Nexstar also documented how permitting television duopolies in medium and small markets will preserve and enhance localism without harming the public interest.

Many other medium and small market television companies submitted comments similar to Nexstar's.<sup>2</sup> These companies, like Nexstar, urge the Commission to eliminate or substantially loosen the Local TV Multiple Ownership Rule, providing the Commission with substantial evidence regarding today's media marketplace and the challenges most medium and small market broadcasters are facing. The stations owned by Nexstar and these other companies are the stations that local communities look to for local news and weather, emergency information such as severe weather alerts, AMBER alerts and other critical emergency information, as well for support of charities in their local communities. Nexstar believes it is incumbent upon the Commission to consider the overwhelming record provided by these broadcasters – the very companies that are most directly affected by the Local TV Ownership Rule – in support of eliminating the Top-Four Restriction.

Despite the clear evidence that medium and small market television broadcasters must have regulatory relief in order to survive, there remain a number of organizations that generally oppose such relief.<sup>3</sup> The reasons these organizations object to regulatory relief for medium and small market television broadcasters who own no other in-market media interests vary, but include seeking to regulate activities such as children's programming and retransmission consent negotiations through the Commission's ownership rules rather than through rules targeted to those specific concerns; incorrect data and assumptions; and the general determination to treat companies such as Nexstar as if they are equivalent to Disney/ABC, General Electric/NBC, Viacom/CBS, News Corp/Fox, Time Warner, Google and Yahoo!.

(“Comments of Cascade Broadcasting”); Granite Broadcasting Corporation (“Comments of Granite Broadcasting”); and the Smaller Market Television Stations (“Comments of Smaller Market Stations”) (all submitted on October 23, 2006). In addition, companies such as Entravision Holdings, LLC, Gannett Co., Inc., Belo Corp. and Hearst-Argyle (which operate in many of the larger medium markets) provide ample support for the relaxation or elimination of the Local TV Ownership Rule. KVMD Licensee Co., L.L.C. also supports relaxation of the Local TV Ownership Rule – indeed, KVMD advocates permitting triopolies – but recommends that the Commission revise its localism policies, particularly with respect to its must-carry rules.

When considering these objections, it is incumbent upon the Commission to recognize that its broadcast ownership rules are not the mechanism for regulating children's programming or retransmission consent; nor should the Commission withhold necessary revisions to its Local TV Ownership Rule based on wholly speculative or incorrect information. The time is long overdue for the Commission to recognize that broadcasters with no other in-market media interests are not Big Media and, indeed, that it is in the public interest to nurture such medium and small market broadcasters as an antidote to Big Media. Accordingly, the Commission should ignore the inaccurate "sound bites" provided by certain commenters and consider the reality that, until the Commission revises its Local TV Ownership Rule, medium and small market broadcasters will continue to struggle, quite probably through a reduction of the very local programming that many commenters are so vociferously seeking to protect. It is time for the Commission to acknowledge that the media environment has changed drastically since 1964 and to adopt a local TV ownership rule that will permit medium and small market television broadcasters to compete effectively in today's media environment.

II. MEDIUM AND SMALL MARKET BROADCASTERS ARE UNITED IN THEIR RECOGNITION THAT THE COMMISSION'S LOCAL TV OWNERSHIP RULE MUST BE CHANGED.

Virtually all of the small and medium market television broadcasters providing comments in this proceeding agree that the Commission must relax or eliminate the Top-Four Restriction in the Local TV Ownership Rule in order to permit such broadcasters to continue serving the public interest with local programming.<sup>4</sup> Several of these commenters provide extensive data on the state of the current media marketplace.<sup>5</sup> These commenters and others also provide the Commission with data on the myriad of challenges facing medium and small market broadcasters. For example, Cascade Broadcasting states that it “operates as economically as it can,” yet remains at a competitive disadvantage with respect to programming and technological innovation.<sup>6</sup> The Smaller Market Stations state that the digital transition costs are overburdening smaller market stations and that such costs do not include the very real and substantial costs stations will be incurring as they upgrade their studio and other equipment to broadcast in a digital format.<sup>7</sup> (Nexstar notes that there currently are not any means to recoup these extensive costs from additional advertising revenues or subscription fees.) Block Communications corroborates that “audiences are migrating away from free, over-the-air local broadcast stations

<sup>4</sup> The lone exception is Equity Broadcasting Corporation. Equity seemingly does not object to relaxation of the Local TV Ownership Rule so long as the Commission prevents “an undue concentration of revenue” by one television station owner in the market. Equity also appears to be bringing its complaints in pending adjudicatory proceedings to this ownership proceeding, which the Commission should not countenance.

and [are moving towards] subscription content . . . .”<sup>8</sup> Gray Television points out that the Commission itself already has recognized that the ability of local stations to compete successfully in medium and small markets has been affected negatively by today’s media marketplace.<sup>9</sup>

These broadcasters also recognize that, without meaningful regulatory relief that permits stations in medium and smaller markets to own more than one station in a market to achieve the efficiencies such ownership will allow, viewers will lose diversity of sources for local news and information. Nexstar and many of these commenters acknowledge that localism is about serving the local community, which should include providing local news and other local programming. Nonetheless, the costs associated with producing local news are extremely high and require significant capital investment, and many medium and small market stations are abandoning local news programming in order to survive. For example, Gray Television tells the Commission that in one market one of its competitors has significantly curtailed news operations and in another market Gray’s station is the only station providing local news.<sup>10</sup> Hoak Media advises the Commission that in one market where it produces news for two stations Hoak has stabilized and improved the local news for its station; yet in a second, larger market, Hoak is facing significant challenges in developing a local news presence.<sup>11</sup> The Smaller Market Stations provide the Commission with specific instances where medium and small market broadcasters have discontinued their newscasts for economic reasons.<sup>12</sup> As Nexstar pointed out in its comments, 56 percent of stations producing local news programming are only breaking even or are losing money on such broadcasts.<sup>13</sup>

Thus, struggling stations are reducing or eliminating local news and other programming targeted to the local community in order to reduce costs. Indeed, Nexstar believes that if it were not for the combined news operations (through shared services agreements) in several of its markets, local news programming on at least one of the stations in these markets would have been discontinued due to the high costs required to provide local news programming.

As Hoak Media informs the Commission, the solution to this dilemma is simple – the cost savings and additional revenues generated from television duopolies permit the development of more and better local programming.<sup>14</sup> In fact, the Commission has already recognized that the owners of same-market combinations have the ability and incentive to offer more programming responsive to the needs and interests of their communities.<sup>15</sup> If the Commission desires to preserve local news programming in medium and small markets it must act now to eliminate the Top-Four Restriction and permit television broadcasters who have no other in-market media interests to own two stations in a market.

The Prometheus court affirmed this Commission finding. 373 F. 3d at p. 415.

As even the staunchest of those who object to any relaxation of the Local TV Ownership Rule must admit, there now is an abundance of means for someone to obtain information on just about any subject. “Diversity does not equate with popularity or share [but whether] these contributors are accessible to the public”<sup>16</sup> Furthermore, as Sinclair points out, “the FCC’s broadcast rules do not require [any FCC licensee to] actually provide any news content.”<sup>17</sup> Accordingly, the Top-Four Restriction no longer makes sense as the method for protecting diversity.

It is time for the Commission to recognize what many medium and small market broadcasters have long understood – the Top-Four Restriction precludes those television broadcasters who urgently need regulatory relief from realizing the benefits of consolidation. Indeed, this artificially created restriction is unfairly denying medium and small market broadcasters the opportunity to achieve the much-needed operational efficiencies necessary for their ability to continue providing local programming. Retaining the restriction will only accelerate the loss of local news and other local programming in medium and small markets.

III. RELAXATION OR ELIMINATION OF THE LOCAL TV OWNERSHIP RULE WILL NOT HARM THE PUBLIC INTEREST.

Despite the overwhelming evidence that relaxation or elimination of the Local TV Ownership Rule is necessary to ensure that medium and small market television broadcasters who own no other in-market media interests are able to continue providing local news and other local programming, there remain some organizations that object to such rule changes based on their incorrect assumptions that the public will no longer have continued access to diverse sources of local news and information if two stations are commonly-owned. Other organizations seek to regulate compliance with other Commission obligations through the broadcast ownership rules notwithstanding the fact that such activities can be and are regulated through separate Commission rules. The common thread among these objections is that all of these organizations seem to assume the worst regarding medium and small market television broadcasters without any factual basis.

A. Medium and Small Market Communities Will Not Be Deprived of Diversity in Local Programming if the Local TV Ownership Rule Is Relaxed or Eliminated.

AFTRA claims that “owners of media seek to achieve economies of scale by recycling, reusing and repurposing existing content . . . across all commonly-owned platforms . . .” and that “local communities are deprived of diverse sources of news and entertainment [by commonly-owned ventures].”<sup>18</sup> CWA makes the sweeping assumption that media consolidation “has facilitated a decline in both the quality and quantity of local news, information, and entertainment programming” and blames this decline on “concentration of ownership driving corporate owners to focus on higher profits [and devote] fewer resources to newsgathering and in-depth investigation and analysis . . . .”<sup>19</sup> Nonetheless, the evidence provided by AFTRA and CWA does not support their premise that local programming in medium and small markets will be harmed if the Commission permits medium and small market television broadcasters without any other in-market media interests to own two stations in a market.

AFTRA’s “evidence” includes its erroneous assertion that Nexstar’s stations WCIA and WCFN (both located in the Champaign-Springfield-Urbana Designated Market Area) broadcast virtually identical local news content. AFTRA states that Nexstar has abandoned its obligation to serve the public interest goals of diversity and competition in Champaign/Springfield.<sup>20</sup> Apparently AFTRA feels confident in making its absolutely false statements simply because, in Champaign/Springfield, Nexstar uses the same anchor and studio set to broadcast local news for both WCIA and WCFN. Had AFTRA actually viewed any of the news programming broadcast on WCIA and WCFN it would have discovered that, in fact, the local news content broadcast on WCIA focuses on the Champaign area while the local news content broadcast on WCFN focuses on Springfield. As shown in the scripts attached hereto in Exhibit 1, for the local news broadcast on WCFN at 9:00 p.m. and WCIA at 10:00 p.m. for the period November 13 through November 16, at most only two common local news stories were broadcast on both stations on the same day.<sup>21</sup> Moreover, prior to Nexstar's acquisition of WCFN, there was no separate local newscast broadcast on WCFN. It is only through the determination and planning of Nexstar's Champaign management that a daily newscast on WCFN was initiated, thereby providing an entirely new local programming resource that previously did not exist in the Champaign-Springfield-Urbana market.

AFTRA also claims that "common ownership . . . creates an economic disincentive for station owners to compete against themselves by putting different programming on the air."<sup>22</sup> Similarly, CWA complains that local programming is harmed when one company owns more

<sup>20</sup> Comments of AFTRA at pp. 14-15. AFTRA also makes this allegation with respect to markets in which Nexstar produces local news for a second station through shared services agreements.

<sup>21</sup> Nexstar notes that it provided similar information with respect to the news content of several stations in its Reply Comments submitted in MB Docket 02-277 on February 3, 2003. Should the Commission so desire, Nexstar will compile updated information regarding the news broadcasts of some of the stations in markets where Nexstar both owns a station and produces local news for a second station under a shared services agreement and submit that information in the instant proceeding.

than one station in a market because “the owner merges operations, slashes jobs, and reduces the quantity and quality of the news.”<sup>23</sup> Both organizations ignore reality. It is in a broadcaster’s economic interest to broadcast different programming on its commonly-owned stations in order to attract the widest possible viewing audience. Further, as the many medium and small market broadcasters participating in this proceeding have documented, merging operations and reducing duplicative staff are two of the benefits associated with common ownership that can improve and increase the local programming broadcast on commonly-owned stations.

CWA also asserts that “understaffing” has led to a decline in the quality of journalism because stations have increased coverage of “entertainment, weather and sensationalistic scandal stories.”<sup>24</sup> However, consolidating operations and reducing staff – particularly back office staff – does not decrease the quantity or quality of local programming. As Nexstar stated in its comments, in the majority of markets where it is providing news to a second station, the quantity of news on both stations has increased and Nexstar is unaware of any complaints from viewers in its markets about the “quality” of its local programming.<sup>25</sup>

Sinclair sums up these objections by stating that they are based on an “irrational fear, based purely on conjecture, that such a combination would somehow harm competition and viewers.”<sup>26</sup> Sinclair is correct; such fears are completely groundless.

<sup>23</sup> Comments of CWA at p. 13. CWA also complains about its member (and presumably non-member) job losses in the Los Angeles and New York markets. AFTRA makes similar complaints, stating that its members “have been and will continue to be harmed by further media consolidation.” Comments of AFTRA at p. 4. This complaint is irrelevant. The Commission’s broadcast ownership rules are not intended to preserve employment positions.

<sup>24</sup> Apparently CWA has made itself the arbiter of what qualifies as “quality” and seeks to use the Commission’s broadcast ownership rules to impose this standard on an entire industry.

B. The Continuing Importance of Local News Programming Mandates Revising the Local TV Ownership Rule to Ensure Such Local Programming Continues to Exist.

CWA and Consumers Union state that most Americans obtain their local news from newspapers and broadcast television stations.<sup>27</sup> Consumers Union then posits that “American communities can ill afford media concentration that impoverishes the values of localism . . . [and] reasonable ownership limits can ensure that the public will continue to have access to local news and information . . . .”<sup>28</sup> Consumers Union relies on numerous studies to support its argument that locally-owned broadcast stations provide more local and community news than non-locally-owned stations and result in less bias and corporate editorial control. Nexstar has not independently analyzed these studies, but notes that at least one of the studies Consumers Union relies on is seriously flawed.<sup>29</sup> Nexstar also notes that it does not exercise any “corporate” control over its stations’ local news content. All editorial decisions are made by management in the particular station’s market.

Consumers Union also emphasizes the importance of investigative journalism to society at large and complains about the lack of such journalism today.<sup>30</sup> However, true investigative journalism is expensive to conduct and produce for stations in small markets. As Gray Television, Hoak Media and the Smaller Market stations have indicated, local news is disappearing in medium and small markets because broadcasters can no longer bear the heavy

<sup>27</sup> Comments of CWA at pp. 18-19; Comments of Consumers Union at pp. 11-12. Consumers Union discounts the role of the Internet and bloggers in providing information to the general public apparently because these websites and bloggers do not meet Consumers Union’s standards for “journalism.”

expenses associated with producing local programming. Therefore, Consumers Union cannot have it both ways – that is, it cannot in one hand complain about the ever-diminishing number of television stations that produce local news and engage in investigative journalism and on the other hand insist that, despite the substantial evidence to the contrary, the Commission must retain ownership rules to ensure that the public has access to local news and investigative journalism. As Cascade succinctly states: “The clarion call of those who espouse ‘source diversity’ above all things will lead to fewer over-the-air television stations in small and medium markets . . . .”

Moreover, the Commission’s ownership rules have no impact on whether a television station broadcasts local news and other programming. Indeed, as the massive quantity of evidence provided in this proceeding demonstrates, the Commission’s Top-Four Restriction substantially prevents local television broadcasters from achieving the necessary efficiencies and economies of scale that are paramount to preserving local programming. If, as CWA and Consumers Union claim, television stations are important to maintaining/providing local news coverage and other local programming of interest (such as coverage of sporting events, debates and community activities) then the Commission must take action to preserve stations’ ability to fulfill this important function and eliminate the Top-Four Restriction for medium and small market television broadcasters who have no other in-market media interests.

C. The Commission Should Not Use its Broadcast Ownership Rules to Regulate Matters Governed by Other Commission Regulations.

Cequal Communications and the Children’s Media Policy Coalition seek to enforce Commission rules and policies such as retransmission consent and children’s programming obligations through the Commission's broadcast ownership rules.<sup>31</sup> Nexstar initially notes that these are comments in search of a problem. Although Cequal's retransmission consent negotiations with Sinclair evidently were difficult, the parties did reach agreement for Cequal's carriage of Sinclair's stations. The Children's Media Policy Coalition merely is speculating that a broadcaster permitted to own two stations in a market would broadcast duplicative children's programming on its commonly-owned stations.

In contrast to the Children's Media Policy Coalition speculation (based on a survey of only the second largest television market), many of the medium and small market commenters have substantiated that the argument that single station ownership is the only way to achieve programming diversity is largely a fiction. For example, as one small market broadcaster states, "multicast streams from the same television station may espouse different views to better serve different audiences."<sup>32</sup> Moreover, Nexstar notes that the Commission has already adopted limits on duplicative children's programming on a single station's multicast channels and could expand such rule to apply to stations under dual ownership through a separate rulemaking proceeding should the Commission determine that a problem actually exists.

Nexstar also notes that The United States Conference of Catholic Bishops seems to be asking the Commission to engage in content regulation. The Conference states that the Commission should continue to restrict common ownership of broadcast stations because the Conference has experienced difficulties obtaining coverage of its events.<sup>33</sup> Notwithstanding the

Conference's complaints about its difficulties, a review of the Commission's closed-captioning waiver docket shows a plethora of religious organizations seeking waiver of the Commission's closed-captioning rules. The number and nature of those many petitions is proof that broadcasters are not abandoning religious programming.<sup>34</sup>

Cequal's and the Children's Media Coalition's comments are misplaced in this proceeding and should be raised in proceedings directly related to these matters; and the Commission should not use its broadcast ownership rules to require broadcasters to provide any specific programming.

IV. MEDIUM AND SMALL MARKET BROADCAST TELEVISION OWNERS ARE NOT FINANCIALLY HEALTHY.

Several commenters assert that the broadcast industry is healthy and technology will make the industry more so; and that, accordingly, television stations do not need regulatory relief. For example, AFTRA and UCC assert that there is no need for the Commission to alter the Local TV Ownership Rule because the ability of local stations to multicast will solve all their problems.<sup>35</sup> However, as AFTRA acknowledges, consumer technology to receive multicast programming is not widely available at this time and cable systems currently are not required to carry any station's supplemental digital channels. Accordingly, AFTRA is simply making an unsupported assumption that both of these impediments will soon be eliminated. AFTRA and UCC are further assuming that stations will engage in such multicasting despite the fact it has not yet been shown to be a viable business model and without any recognition that developing

<sup>34</sup> CWA also complains that broadcasters are not accepting its advertising because other advertisers object. Comments of CWA at p. 7. At most this is a balancing issue for stations; there is nothing incumbent upon a broadcaster to accept any non-candidate advertising.

quality local programming for multicast channels will require significant investment by television broadcasters.

Similarly, Consumers Union argues that the television broadcasting industry is financially healthy and does not need regulatory relief; and CWA claims broadcasters are crying wolf because collectively the broadcast and cable industry have attained a price to earnings ratio in excess of the S&P 500 average.<sup>36</sup> It is true that there have been some significant broadcast television transactions in 2005 and 2006, but these transactions have involved predominantly larger market stations, or were multi-station transactions. For example, CWA looks at the Emmis, Liberty and Viacom transactions, which involved predominantly larger market stations.<sup>37</sup> Nexstar has been actively seeking to sell certain of its stations in the past year and has been unsuccessful in finding buyers. CWA states that “there are buyers ready to pay a good price” for TV stations, but Nexstar assumes that CWA has never actually tried to sell a medium or small market station.

CWA also asserts that broadcasters create duopolies solely to increase profits. CWA claims that the solution to small and medium market stations’ competitive problems is simply for broadcasters to invest in a quality product (that is, spend money stations do not have) and invest in different technologies such as the Internet. CWA supports this supposed solution by referring to actions Disney and NBC are taking in their largest markets.<sup>38</sup> However, medium and small <sup>37</sup> All but two of the stations sold by Emmis were in the top-85 markets and the two stations outside of the top-85 markets were part of a multi-station transaction involving at least one larger market station. Liberty sold its stations to Raycom, which in turn sold several of both companies’ stations to Barrington Broadcasting and LIN Television (and, again, these stations were in large markets or part of multi-station transactions).

market broadcasters are not Disney and NBC and do not have the financial resources of those companies. Thus, although Nexstar and other companies are making technological investments as they can, such investments are expensive and may or may not provide significant new revenue opportunities. Therefore, Nexstar questions how CWA expects struggling medium and small market broadcasters to generate the funds necessary to pay for CWA's desired solution. Accordingly, with respect to medium and small market television broadcasters, CWA is simply wrong. Eliminating the Top-Four Restriction to permit duopolies in small and medium markets is not about increasing profits, it is about the continuation of local programming and local public service.

For those who assert that the broadcasting industry is financially healthy, there is ample evidence to the contrary. For example, Nexstar's stock price has declined by approximately 64 percent since 2004, and Gray Television states that its stock price has declined by 41.3 percent.<sup>39</sup> And in 2006 alone, at least three medium and small market broadcast companies have declared bankruptcy – Granite Broadcasting, Communications Corporation of America and White Knight Broadcasting.<sup>40</sup> Investors are uneasy about the future of the television broadcasting business.<sup>41</sup>

V. CONCLUSION.

The Local TV Ownership Rule does not address the realities of today's competitive media marketplace. If the Commission and public interest organizations wish to preserve "vigorous debate," it is imperative that medium and small market television broadcasters with no other in-market media interests (i.e., television broadcasters that are not part of Big Media) be permitted to achieve the same efficiencies and economies of scale that are presently achieved in the larger markets. As many broadcasters noted, the Commission already has recognized that the Local TV Ownership Rule poses a threat to local programming. Therefore, it is time for the Commission to take action to preserve local programming and eliminate the Local TV Ownership Rule or relax it to eliminate the Top-Four-Restriction. Accordingly, the Commission should revise the Local TV Ownership Rule to permit a broadcaster with no other in-market ownership interests (i.e., no attributable local radio or newspaper ownership interests) to own two television stations in any market with at least four stations regardless of station rankings. Otherwise, small market broadcasters' profitability will continue to decline and local news and other programming will continue to diminish.

WHEREFORE, for the foregoing reasons, Nexstar respectfully urges the Commission to relax the Local TV Multiple Ownership Rule to allow television broadcasters with no other in-market media interests to own two commercial TV stations in any market.

Respectfully submitted,

NEXSTAR BROADCASTING, INC.
