

To the Federal Communications Commission: Evidence points to the fact that the constant lighting on man-made structures attracts birds and bats flying at night during certain weather conditions. If changing the “bulbs” from constant to strobe lighting could prevent the deaths of these migrating animals, why not just do it? We all know it’s the right thing to do! My life is made more pleasant and peaceful by the presence of birds. I enjoy teaching my grandchildren to appreciate, care for and love them too. The image of hundreds of dead birds lying under thousands of towers when a simple change of lighting could have prevented it is very dehumanizing. Please change this antiquated lighting regulation now!

Thank you,
Linda Clougherty

Expecting? Get great news right away with email Auto-Check.
Try the Yahoo! Mail Beta.
http://advision.webevents.yahoo.com/mailbeta/newmail_tools.html