

This question was asked, and decided after much deliberation and a long comment period. If Morse Code had been considered "a critical skill" necessary to fight terrorism, I am sure the NTIA or other governmental agencies would have recognized this and acted accordingly.

It is my opinion that this is but another attempt to "open an can of beans that have already been consumed." A prudent rule change change was made and should stand as written.