

I would ask that the FCC take a larger look at USF and to not cap wireless funds. Living in rural America I can first hand provide you with the importance of wireless service. Our wireless phones are our primary line that we use daily. It provides the critical link for our family to insure that we stay in touch. Recently when my wife was involved in an accident it was my cellular phone that was used to contact emergency personnel. We continue to look to wireless services to provide that piece of mind to know that when we need to make a call we can. There are still many areas today where coverage is needed and to force rural America to accept poor service, by not allowing this fund to do what it was established to do, is a disservice to America. I trust that with the role that you have been instructed that you do the right thing and allow wireless services to continue to expand into rural America. Without this more and more people in the global market place that we work in will be forced to move to urban areas that do.
