

Please consider that qualified interpreters are needed to provide effective communication using video relay. If the FCC reduces the rate of pay for Video Relay Services, the quality of access will be reduced and members of society using sign language to communicate will be going backwards from finally having more equal access to phone conversations with persons using spoken language even though the technology is available to provide a level playing field. What a shame it would be to have the technology yet have the FCC cut the ability to access it.