

Leave it alone

The internet as presently constituted is the most efficient and egalitarian expression of free speech and social and commercial intercourse ever instituted. It operates quite well without the government's meddling. Any governmental intervention would only be for the purpose of adding expense to the general public to allow the nation's wealthy to find another outlet to exploit the populace, or to restrict the flow of ideas and information. Try to remember that our Bush administration is a conservative, small government, non-interventionist group and when the laughter stops, try to implement your conservative lip service and actually take an action in the public interest rather than in the usual manner to enrich the administration's contributors and owners.
