

The internet belongs to all of us

It's high time to let more competition and innovation into the internet market in the U.S. That's what our system is supposed to stand for! As long as a few major telecoms have a protected market, we will continue to lag less developed countries in access, price, and variety of applications available to ordinary citizens.

The internet was developed with public investment through public institutions, and taxpayers should be the beneficiaries of the technology.
