

The government must protect our airwaves from the same corporate gatekeepers that have stifled innovation and competition in Internet markets.

To restore America's leadership in high speed Internet services, the FCC must ensure that the upcoming auction sets aside at least 30 MHz of spectrum for open and non-discriminatory Internet access. This will guarantee that new entrants have the opportunity to enter the market in competition with incumbent providers.

It would be a big mistake to hand over these airwaves to the very same phone and cable companies that dominate the wireline market. We need more competition and innovation, not more of the same. This new wireless spectrum must be open and neutral so that America can build a better Internet for everyone.

I live out in the country and I just got DSL. It disconnects itself several times a day. The phone company claims it can do nothing. We do not need to turn over our airwaves from profit-making enterprises that then charge us to use the airwaves we gave them!!!!!!

I know this government is bought and sold to the corporations and that you people reading this are just going to patronize us while you figure out new ways to rip us off. However, each of you has an individual conscience. Pay attention to it and make sure America has a free and high speed internet.
