

FCC: Keep our airways open to the public. We have a right to an Internet that will connect all of us in a very efficient, neutral, affordable way. The giant Internet providers such as AT&T, Verizon, Comcast, etc. with an already widely established clientele and efficient technology argue for their superior qualifications in obtaining the major share of the airwaves over the public's qualifications. In other words, they think they can revolutionize the airways much more widely and efficiently than the smaller providers. Wrong, wrong! They are merciless price gougers who will as usual choose who receives their services and who won't, all for a big price. The public has first rights to the open airways not the corporates. Don't sell us out.
