

The public spectrum promises to make access to the Internet within the reach of all citizens. It's crucial to make sure that public policy ensures that this resource promotes the free exchange of ideas, and that this goal is not compromised by giving special consideration to existing commercial interests. I strongly urge the FCC to keep this new wireless spectrum open and neutral so that America can build a better Internet for everyone.