

The government must protect our airwaves from the same corporate gatekeepers that have stifled innovation and competition in Internet markets.

Why must everything always benefit the corporate elite and the super rich? The airwaves are the property of every American citizen, not just the rich. Yet time after time, you bend over backwards to give the richest of the rich more and take away from ordinary hard working underpaid proles.

Now you are poised to give away yet another treasure of ours to the very companies that have been gouging us all these years...and no one is the least bit surprised. But we are furious. Don't give our airwaves to the corporate giants. All they do is break their promises, gouge Americans and send their jobs to China.

To restore America's leadership in high speed Internet services, the FCC must ensure that the upcoming auction sets aside at least 30 MHz of spectrum for open and non-discriminatory Internet access. This will guarantee that new entrants have the opportunity to enter the market in competition with incumbent providers.

It would be a big mistake to hand over these airwaves to the very same phone and cable companies that dominate the wireline market. We need more competition and innovation, not more of the same. This new wireless spectrum must be open and neutral so that America can build a better Internet for everyone.
