

The government must protect our airwaves from the same corporate gatekeepers that have stifled innovation and competition in Internet markets.

To restore America's leadership in high speed Internet services, the FCC must ensure that the upcoming auction sets aside at least 30 MHz of spectrum for open and non-discriminatory Internet access. This will guarantee that new entrants have the opportunity to enter the market in competition with incumbent providers.

It would be a big mistake to hand over these airwaves to the very same phone and cable companies that dominate the wireline market. We need more competition and innovation, not more of the same. This new wireless spectrum must be open and neutral so that America can build a better Internet for everyone.

Don't you think it's time for the the FCC and the Bush Administration to actually do something FOR the American people instead of selling them out to the highest bidder? Right now, I can't wait to vote you out in 2008, but a lot of swing voters like me a waiting to see what happens on this and many other important issues.

I'm sick of paying more than $60 a month for high-speed internet access. This is far higher in other countries which could explain why the U.S. now ranks only 16th in the world for internet access. Do you want to see our great country continue to slide towards mediocrity? I don't so please allocate this small piece of the wireless spectrum to the people and not to the giant corporations.
