

I find it terribly ironic that the very corporations that spend millions of dollars to avoid paying the taxes that brought about the internet, now think they are somehow entitled to control something that they refused to invest in. The American tax payer built the internet and continues to pay for the maintenance and upgrades to the networks. So by the very definition of ownership these airways belong to the American people.