

The government must protect our airwaves from the same corporate gatekeepers that have stifled innovation and competition in Internet markets.

To restore America's leadership in high speed Internet services, the FCC must ensure that the upcoming auction sets aside at least 30 MHz of spectrum for open and non-discriminatory Internet access. This will guarantee that new entrants have the opportunity to enter the market in competition with incumbent providers. Truly, America's best ideas have come from minds given the freedom of having no restrictions on their creative endeavors. Think of the possibilities!

It would be a big mistake to hand over these airwaves to the very same phone and cable companies that dominate the wireline market. Everyone knows that monopolies cripple the potential of any free-market ideas. We need more competition and innovation, not more of the same. To quote the late President Ronald Reagan, "America is too big for small dreams." This new wireless spectrum must be open and neutral so that America can build a better Internet for everyone.
