I view this effort as an attempt to screen the average citizen out of using network technologies as anything but a passive receiver of product marketing. I also view it as evidence that the big business is too cozy with the watchdog agencies that are supposed to be operating in the best interest of the country.

Do not do this. It will ultimately stifle the ability of this country to remain competitive as it will be a major capitulation to the status quo rather than an investment of faith in the future of innovation. These companies do not deserve to be canonized as the only arbiters of internet technologies.

The broadcasting industry should not be party to valuable, finite airspace which is still in the public domain. If they are granted these frequencies, it is certain to benefit very few while costing the majority losses from parking the space. Please, these airwaves belong to the people of the United States. Even if they are not being utilized today, placing them in the hands of those who can make them disappear from the available landscape is an avoidable loss for the future. As servants of the Public, it is your duty to maintain resources in a way that will allow future use by the public. How does it keep these resources in the public domain by turning them over to the big companies? The only way it would work is if there are strings attached that require them to be used for new services, or they return to the public trust.

Open up the airwaves! Stop the big company sitting on technology just to keep us from it!

You know the airwaves belong to all of us. Surely you know this. Do the right thing.

Keep the internet FREE and the Media free from Corporate Greed/Control.

Do we really want to go back to the Ma Bell era?

Large companies owning the airwaves will suppress freedom of speech and the public will not get unbiased news.

In 1996, when the radio airwaves were deregulated, it was with the express purpose of keeping communication open to the public. However, it seems that it might have had the opposite effect, as companies such as Clear Channel, have bought out the competition and shut down the local radio stations. We should not let this same thing happen to the Internet. The Internet is perhaps the greatest tool for democracy we have at our disposal today. Let’s encourage competition; not stifle it.

It is unfair that corporations should be allowed to monopolize the public airwaves in ways that prevent their full use for the public good.

So what’s it going to be, FCC: Use the public airwaves for the public good, or turn them over to big companies who will stifle competition, innovation, and the wireless Internet revolution? FCC, do what is right, for the public good. Do your job and keep Verizon and AT&T in their place. Serve the public and don’t hand over the airwaves.

Please give the public a voice. Newly available airwaves that you are planning to sell to commercial interests are a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to revolutionize Internet access – beaming high-speed signals to every park bench, coffee shop, workplace, and home in America at more affordable prices than current Internet service. Phone and cable companies don’t want this competition to their Internet service—they’d rather purchase the airwaves at auction and sit on them. Please do not side with greedy corporations who will take advantage of the public.

DO any of you remember how AT&T was broken up because there was an unlevel playing field, or so "they" claimed. Then we had the telecomm act and how well that worked to ensure "response able" decesions where the good of the community and the people who inhabited it were primary. With the last few rounds of buying and merging it is clear that corporate profits reign supreme.

We claim to be a democratic society, yet we appoint a panel of three individuals to watch over the citizens rights. Once upon a time there was the idea of "free press", which means now the press is free to consciously set out the premise of "Public Airways" and to have a dictate or mandate that those media companies would have to make time available to cover all the worlds "news" as it is. The most frightening is the news stories in which the media that broadcasts over the airwaves and it is literally free.

Why in a Democratic society does any corporate entity have the power to make public policy? ie. The media in question is owned and operated by about six major players and they have collectively dropped objectivity and not allowed any reporters to go "after the story" ie. Edward R Murrow was an example of the type of conscious being that sought out the truth behind the news, today even that is fabricated right before your eyes and ears. Propaganda arm of the new power structure, what do you call a society where the gov’t protects corporations and de-means the workers? There is that ole "F" word rearing it’s ugly head.

The Supreme Court has fallen, by stepping in and selecting a president, mostly down hill from then till now. So the one media technology that many enjoy and use for a myriad of conveniences will now be dissected and owned by somebody. The FCC is supposed to be the gate keepers for the benefit of the people and look where the FCC has taken things, more media concentration which means less diversity. That was the flame of the democratic spirit that lives on in some, in thought, word and deed. That even handed, open fist welcoming hand and an ideal that postulated the premise that "ALL (Wo)Men) were created equal and endowed with rights as a human being. But one does see how easily these rights are violated or denied as

The Internet would never have happened if it had been started by these large companies. Us little guys need to get a fair shake, and we can’t. I build mobile software applications for a living. I find that companies like Verizon are not interested in opening their networks to outsiders and have a philosophy of creating a "walled garden" where they control what you do and how you do it. This should not stand.

Communication should be free, in a free country. When our means of communication are controlled by big business, we are prisoners in an ever-increasing web of price increases, and eventually the line between those people who can afford the Internet, to eat out in good restaurants, to fly, and to be able to drive a car will be so wide that the have’s will be the only ones who can afford these luxuries. Please keep the airwaves free!

High speed wireless internet is going to be a vitally important to the economic strength of this nation. It will become a major tool for education, communication, and commerce. The United States can lead the world with this revolution, or it can follow by allowing the airwaves to be held by a few corporations whose interests may not align with those of the nation. Keep the public airwaves public; ensure that they are used for the good of the People.

Please don’t turn privatize the airwaves. Through landlocked cable, we in rural town in America, have already become victims of monopolies. And, if we are limited to public use of the airwaves only via local governmental services such as the libraries, because small towns cannot afford a wide array of services, we lower income folk will be further shut out from the wide-world of information & interchange.

The FCC should protect the public good by setting auction rules that prohibit anti-competitive behavior. If the government auctioned off the right to maintain a public highway to Ford, we would certainly not let Ford block Toyotas from the roads. Likewise, big phone and cable should not be able to keep innovative companies off our airwaves. They also shouldn't be able to tell their wireless Internet customers which websites they can access, as they do now. And just as phone companies can't tell customers what phones can be plugged into a wall jack, cell and wireless companies should not be able to dictate which phones or wireless devices people use on their networks.

Whatever happened to the promise of competition driving down the costs of home Internet? The Telecommunications Act of 1998 hardly fulfilled that goal, and this is going to just make it worse.
   Evan Singer

Please, please, please, understand that for-profit domination (control) of airwaves is dangerous. Having open markets is fine, but when information MUST make a profit then it will be marketed in ways designed to make that profit and NOT in ways that make vital information available. Consider the domination of broadcasting, computer news, etc. on the Anna Nicole Smith fiasco while we were in important negotiations with North Korea and discussions with Iran. Consider Fox News or Air America. Now consider what would happen if this were expanded to the rest of the information backbone! Please do not cave in or sell out to corporate pressure to increase their monopolies. They have good business rights now, we do not need to subsidize them any more.
   John Staack
   Wheaton, Illinois

Why after 9/11 are we even discussing the use of public airways for other than the greater good. That greatest good can only be for the use of our first responders. Keep the public airways in the public hands for public use.

Too often in recent years, the FCC has made decisions to benefit commercial interests at the expense of the common good. It seems to me that if you want to foster innovation and competition, turning the public airwaves over to giants like AT&T and Verizon would be contraproductive to those ends.

The FCC has done an excellent job of protecting the public interest over the years in establishing sensible standards for radio and television and in the allocation of the frequency spectrum. ”Media” and ”Telecom” industries are no longer mutually exclusive entities. Companies and the means by which they deliver information to us are becoming further and further consolidated. Yet these corporations who are diminishing in number but expanding in size, do not necessarily have the public interest at heart. As our means of communication and sources of information fall further into private ownership, our ability to function as a democracy will become more and more restricted. The U.S. is lagging far behind other nations in this regard. HD television, broadband, reliable and inexpensive cellular phone service are old news in much of Asia and Europe. This newly available spectrum in which you are considering represents an opportunity for our nation to again be leaders in technology, communication and democracy. Please take this opportunity to ensure that our communities have a free, modern and open means to communicate, and to stay informed.

Giving the airwaves over to large corporations will stifle free speech and limit access to information. Any free society needs access to information and arts not controlled and filtered by governments or large corporations or special-interest groups. Our other news and arts media are so controlled and no longer present information or programs NOT filtered through a corporate or political eye or without a view to the profit motive. The Internet is the most democratic activity we have – ordinary people as well as the high and mighty can be heard. We are already subjected to constant bombardment from corporations – please do not sell off the public airwaves to the highest bidders.

I won’t say that we as a country are behind in technology, or communications, but we are way behind where we should be. The free-enterprise model does encourage innovation and creativity, but only allows implementation when a clear profit can be realized. The true innovations, the revolutions in technology, communications, and infrastructure, these happen when people and companies start ahead of the parade rather than waiting for the bandwagon. We need to encourage vision and leadership, and the government needs to set both the example and the pace.

As an American who cherishes our democracy and the right of citizens (unlike those of Venezuela, whose right to airwaves is being taken away by Hugo Chavez as I write this) I urge the FCC to ensure the use of public airwaves for the public good and not to turn them over to corporations which will—in the name of "free enterprise" and competition—actually stifle competition, innovation, and the wireless Internet movement. I urge the FCC to decide that whoever wins the competition be mandated NOT to stifle innovation and true competition. We've had enough of "the Halliburton problem" and the American people are fed up with private companies being given the power to stifle individual American citizens and their inalienable rights!

Well established and big phone and cable should not be able to keep innovative companies out of our airwaves. The history of American business shows that competition and innovation from small companies is what has often driven advances in technology. The FCC’s job is to make sure that is allowed to happen in the communications industry, to the benefit of the American population. Do not abandon our airwaves to the large corporations (remember what happened to the American auto industry when the large corporations were able to stifle innovation).

The newly available 'public airwave frequencies' being auctioned should be used for public good. Major corporations should not have the opportunity to buy up and 'fence off' frequency rights that are meant for public use and public good. It's all well and good to sell portions of the spectrum at public auction. Wireless providers do need consistency to be able to make the investment in infrastructure required for national wireless networks. But when companies license spectrum at auction, and then don't do anything with it, that's not in the public good. That's corporations purchasing a monopoly position in the market. Not good for customers, not good for the people of the United States, not good for voters.

This certainly would revolutionize the internet in many ways, making it accessible to more people. This would, of course, present more challenges to the enforcement of current laws and probably force the creation of more new ones regarding scams, fraud, etc...but I think if we are ready for these challenges, it may be time to face the music. If on the other hand, means the increased monitoring of and censorship of websites and other first amendment issues, than I think the FCC plays a vital role in providing the balanced, common sense strategy for not only for the public, but also for the companies and businesses that depend on the public support for their continuation. (boycotts and lack of public popularity could possibly affect change later with the right organization!)
My biggest concern is that the Internet becomes the ONLY way to receive services and goods in the future...limiting the people do not have access to the internet through portable devices. (which is already happening!)
Even MOVE ON is a internet movement...people who do not have access are limited from being able to take action like I have the privilege to do right now!

This country was, I believe, intended to be "Of the People, By the People and For the People". Why and where have we gone so wrong as to even consider allowing a few corporations so much control over our airwaves? Dear FCC officials,
Today's headlines speak of the ways that democracy in Estonia have been challenged by Russia invading that country's internet capacity (in retaliation for removal of a Soviet era statute). The internet is critical to freedom of speech, and the airwaves that you are considering selling to private companies will likely put constraints on that freedom.

Richard Perl

The airwaves are part of our national legacy and should not be handed over to private interests who are more inclined to serving shareholder objectives than serving community needs.

Frank Dimauro

The internet is the only place left to those of us who seek unbiased, truthful news. When profit is the "bottom line" we are without any place to get this information. Our very democracy will be lost if these multi national companies take over public airwaves.

Public airwaves belong to the public and should be used to bring internet access to everyone at the lowest possible cost. Giving these airwaves to private companies who will then re-sell access at a profit does NOT make good sense.

There is enough corporate profiteering going on in this country at present, and not nearly enough investment back into the people and human and infrastructure resources. Please keep the public airwaves open for the public good.

The news is already more politically lopsided than ever before, thanks to the unilateral relaxing of ownership rules, approved by Michael Powell 5 years ago. Go ahead and take away the remaining method of free information - a police state can't have dissent now, can it?

I think it is disgusting and I am incensed that entities such as Verizon, AT&T, et al, have the need to become even more greedy by trying to take over our airwaves.

I am a home user and to know that these corporate hogs will be putting the kybosh on the litter guys, sickens me to no end.

I am an AT&T and Verizon customer, at this point; however, I am looking to DUMP both of them and go with companies that 'work and play' well with the rest of the world.

Don't you people have enough? Must you take over our airwaves, as well? Shame on you, you greedy S.O.B.s!

Bye, bye Verizon and good riddance to you, AT&T. You both give lousy service and are way too expensive, anyway; but I refuse to bow to the corporate hogs, any longer. It has gone far enough for me; and you both have lost one more customer.

It has NOT been 'my pleasure' doing business with neither Verizon nor AT&T.

Stifling competition is bad business and even worse for the American public. The air waves should belong to We, the People, to be utilized for the common good – NOT for monopolistic gain. This is so wrong!

Although I have recently read that some scientists believe that wireless technology may be wreaking havoc in ways that we don't understand—for example, killing off a giant population of our honeybees—I don’t want the public commons given over to the control of large corporations. We need to investigate wireless technology’s ramifications, but to simply allow the large players to stifle competition is not acceptable. It is time to start regulating these large corporations more stringently, and—if necessary—revoke their charters when they deserve it.

While I’m an ardent supporter of capitalism, I also believe that relying on market forces to regulate corporate behavior is untenable in so large and diverse a society as the U.S. In our society today, the use of the airwaves must not be surrendered to corporations!

The airwaves that are now available to us should not be gobbled up by those with the most power. Ancient English law established the idea of “commons” on the ground – and we have also reserved land for our parks and resources for the public good. A "commons" in the airwaves – "reserved space" will create a commonwealth of information resources for the public and people around the world. This is no time to be giving corporate giants who engage, per force, in much backroom maneuvering such control over a resource that by rights belongs to the people.

For years, we’ve decried the lack of interest in politics, public affairs, and have lamented the failure of people to participate in public debate. Since the rise of the internet, that’s changed. Perhaps the FCC and it’s keepers don’t like the full public debate enabled by free access to the net. We’ve seen the decline in the quality of news reporting and programming generally as competition has been reduced on the broadcast spectrum. If our form of government is to succeed, people have to be able to talk to one another without having a gate keeper stack the deck in favor of its friends.

Not everything should be for sale; not everything has to make a huge profit.

In the case of the Internet, the access providers should not govern content.

The public airwaves should be used for the public good. The government must protect our airwaves from corporate gatekeepers who would stifle innovation and competition in the wireless Internet market. The government should always remember the phrase, "We the People of the United States of America." Corporations are not people; the people who form corporations do so for just that reason so that those people are not personally liable for the actions of the corporation. Corporations are not voters and therefore not constituents. The rights and concerns of individual citizens must always be upheld without consideration for profit opportunities of corporations. The market will decide the profitability of the business of corporations. The government created and run by and for We the People of the United States has no business representing the interests of corporations over the interests of individual citizens.

Dear Commission members,
The federal government has the responsibility to represent the best interests of the citizens. I strongly urge you to preserve a portion of our public airwaves for future innovations to serve the common good of rural and low-income citizens. In addition, use your right to review licenses granted to any company on a regular basis, judging your granting of renewals carefully.

There has been little public good from the Federal Government during the past 6 years. Over $500,000,000,000.00 in debt over a police action in Iraq that created an exacerbation of civil strife. Information and education for all has taken a back seat. PLEASE do not "sell out" to corporations for profit. Keep the airwaves for public good. I'm 75 years old and use the internet every day for my own website, writing emails and listening to music from public radio/television. Please keep the airwaves for the Public GOOD.

Much as free speech and a free press served to fuel the development of our democracy, with the rise of new technologies to communicate, we must make access to those modes of communication free as well. I've lived in the UK for the past 5 years and will soon be returning to the States to repatriate. The digital TV and radio technology in the UK is very advanced, and available with no monthly fees through a Freeview tuner box. I'd like to see the American government supporting and promoting schemes like this to spread technology and use the public airwaves for the public good. UK citizens have interactive technology at their fingertips already for FREE - what do Americans have?

Dear FCC,
I want the airwaves to be as free and diverse as possible. I do not want corporate monopolies distorting, censoring, and eliminating programming that I consider necessary for me to be well-informed. I do not want the long arm of "big brother" affecting what I see or listen to, and I do not want politicians to have that kind of mind control. I do not trust the influence of the Bush regime. My understanding is that open competition rather than restricted competition is the best economic model for service and lowered cost. Auctioning it to the highest bidder is indeed a way of restricting competition and thus restricting service. The media in general has not lived up to the mandate that they should devote a certain amount of time serving the public good. So to turn more and more of the airwaves over to the media would be to add salt to the public wound. One should try to balance the rights of the media to own or control the airwaves against the public good which is now being poorly served.

The public airwaves should not be turned over to corporations, in part or in full. The Internet is becoming a major conduit for news and information. Democracy can exist ONLY if the public is an informed public. Corporations have no right to use the public airwaves for their private gain. I highly dislike the idea that anyone should "own" the airwaves other than the entire citizenry of the planet. Corporate profits should not weigh more than public interests, and each individual should determine their own interests and paths of information, rather than have it be filtered or force fed for them according to the financial bottom line.

As a homeschooling parent, I use the internet for education for my children. As a musician and artist, I use it for education, inspiration, community, sharing and business. As a consumer, I use it for education, research, discussion and purchase of goods.

I do not want anyone else telling me what I can look at, making me wade through endless ads, directing my attention, or otherwise interfering with my freedom to seek information and pursue my own version of happiness.

I especially don't want anyone filtering or interfering with my ability to get or share information that relates to my decision making on political issues.

It is dangerous to put control of the world's communications, and particularly the World Wide Web, into the hands of profiteers.

As an academic and researcher, as well as an active citizen I depend heavily on a wide range of access to internet news whether I am in the US or working abroad or attending international meetings. My students and fellow citizens likewise. My urban neighbors and their children are already marginalized by the high cost of internet access. The public airwaves need to be made available for the public good, not sealed away in a contractual closet by the dominant current providers. There is an exuberant spirit of freedom and community available only on the internet. People separated by geography, social standing, language and birth can communicate freely with one another. This encourages friendships and knowledge across borders, and in my opinion will help increase the level of peace in the world. Don't make it part of the greed driven marketplace. Keep it part of the free flowing marketplace of ideas.

Since our economy is based upon a free-market system for healthy competition, do not sell the airwaves to a few huge corporations (AT&T, Verizon and Comcast). It is time for the FCC to protect the airwaves for the public good and not auction them off for the gain of commercial enterprises. They are appointed to look out for what is best for the public and to make communications more economic for the general public. Cable TV, Telephone and Internets Rates are already outrageous due to a lack of competition. The FCC’s obligation is to take an action that increases competition.

As a Disabled American, I rely heavily on the internet for communication. On a Fixed Income as I am, it is less affordable every day. Some day I may be able to use the internet to become employable again, or start my own business, if the Big Communications Companies get their way, it will become as out of reach for me as Good Health Care, and Gasoline have become! I was a documentary filmmaker in the 1970’s during the fight over whether Cable TV would continue to have open, free, access to TV for the common people. At that time, Cable TV was filled with art and creative people of all stripes, it was an exciting time, where you could shoot a documentary today and show it on Cable tomorrow, it was using the medium as is was meant to be. But that battle was lost and now only people who can afford programs costing millions have access to TV time and so much beauty has been lost. It is important to the American people that the Internet remains free and is used for the public good as it is now.

Just like radio waves, internet waves should be free to anyone who wants to by the device to use them. It will support the First Amendment rights to access to information.

Please keep the airways open to the PUBLIC. Private corporations already have far too much access!

Public airwaves are public property, and should no more be owned by any corporation than by any foreign nation.

Haven't we had enough of public resources being privatized for corporate profit? The FCC should be representing the public interest, not shilling for AT&T.

If you want to really support competitive business practices, don't hand over power to a potential monopoly. The US has already tried monopoly several times, and it always outraged the citizenry.

There is nothing more important to our freedom and democracy in America than our unfettered ability to express our views to the public, and to read the opinions of others.

We do not need or want gatekeepers who would interfere with that free exchange of ideas, and democracy cannot afford to have such “gatekeepers.”

The public airwaves are just that – public! They belong to ALL of us, not the privileged few with financial or economic power / influence over government. The FCC must consider ALL interests when making its upcoming allocation decisions. The commissioners swore an oath – that oath invokes the "public good", NOT corporate welfare.

We all know what the citizens want for their safety and welfare, the government doesn't give a hoot, and steal from us left and right as well as our rights to speak out or anything else anymore. What right does the government have to take our resources, airwaves being one of them and give to big corporations so their big shots can steal some more from us. This is getting to be a travesty for the whole human race. But what do you care....you do what you like over the bodies, brains and welfare of all of us.

Why can't you officials be honest and true? It would turn out to be for all of us and our children's children, but you are all going the wrong direction....

Too bad.

<td>We live in a semi-rural area &quot;served&quot; by AT&amp;T and know their indifference to providing good service to us because we don't have the &quot;numbers&quot;—specifically they are choosing not to provide DSL service to people living beyond a 5 mile limit. They do not feel they can earn enough return on their investment here, compared to cities. I understand their concern about profit, but being dependent on their decisions seriously affects the services we are provided. Please make the public airwaves for the public good. I can barely imagine what it must be like to work for an agency that supposed to protect the public, and find that what's actually happening is one give away after another to wealthy corporations who's idea of "free speech" is "if you pay for it and if we approve of it". So, of course I want you to do the right thing, but I suppose you would already be doing that if the FCC was doing what it's supposed to do. I and suppose you already know what that is. America’s Internet access is the vital to our National Interest. It is the “Shipping Lane” of the future. We must not fall behind other countries in access or we will fall behind in all future economic endeavors.

John Kavin
Stoughton, MA 02072

The air waves belong to the people not the commercial giants who will titrate it out to the people at great cost and limitations. The auto industry ate up the trolley cars, a great transportation system used by many advanced countries. What did the auto companies give us for it GRIDLOCK, jammed highways, dependence on oil, huge expenses for purchases, for insurance, for repairs. And where did the auto companies end up—BROKE! It will be no different with the air waves. Leave the airwaves for the public, let the public build it up. We don’t need corporate dominance once again. Let them compete for the greater good, not for their private greed.

We use the online news magazines a lot and find them valuable. They report on the news, the real news, that is not profit-making, like what we see on the networks. We want to see the news, not be entertained on a so-called news program. News should be news, and entertainment should be entertainment; they should not be mixed, which is detrimental to both.

While small communities with no television access at all were denied access to these bandwidths with their freeze years ago, their hope remained because they were promised that when the digital conversion was over, the licences for this bandwidth would be unfrozen and they could apply again. I know this, because my own community and my non-profit media company were told that lie. Now, after we find out that we were being deceived, and have had to make other arrangements to get the access to the airwaves that we always deserved to begin with, you turn around and try to limit our community access in another way. The American people are increasingly disgusted with the monopolistic practices of the small number of air wave barons you have foisted upon us, and we demand that you cease and desist. It is bad enough that you deny air broadcast to communities now because they were small and economically depressed, but this will only extend the strangle hold ATT, Verizon and Comcast already have on our communications process. All broadband and most wireless is already exclusively through them now. What we, the public, need, deserve and EXPECT from our elected officials and civil servants in federal agencies are opportunities to create an actual community voice for ourselves, not have controlling robber barons be given larger monopolies over bandwidths that are ours, not theirs to begin with. Try being an servant to the public who employs you for a change, not these international, for profit concerns. It seems you’re their employees right now, not the ones paying your salary.

The spirit of the Internet originally was openness and sharing of information and excitement over the power to collaborate freely. We need that on a nationwide basis. Those who just own bandwidth do not create services that deserve compensation.

Long ago, the U.S. government established the postal service, one effect of which was that long-distance communication could not be monopolized by private companies. The innovations in internet technology should likewise be protected. The internet does not need to be run by the government, but access to it should not be controlled by a few corporations who can set all the rules. Limiting information access inhibits democracy; oligarchy and plutocracy are enemies of the common people.

The public airwaves should be used for the public good. The government must protect our airwaves from corporate gatekeepers who would stifle innovation and competition in the wireless Internet market.

Decreasing the cost and reach of communications for the public will pay off for ALL Americans. I am an educator who is very aware of the power of the internet and various other electronic media. I am unhappy with the idea that the giant phone and other companies using the airwaves can have exclusive access to the new frequencies that will be made available. They should be available for the best use by the public. These large companies are like parasites and will eventually suck us all dry. Please do not let them have exclusive control. Thankyou

The airwaves belong to all the people of the US. Historically, as AM developed and people sat around their radios to hear FDR speak to the people, not only were Americans united against the Great Depression and WWII, but this new technology served the greater good--of the world and the US.

Privatizing the air waves so that only the wealthy or elite can use them, means that the rest of us, average citizens, will be closed out of the opportunities that scientific and technological advances bring us. This is not fair. And must not be allowed!

The middle class and poor of America are already suffering enough!

I beg of you all--STOP THIS PROPOSED INJUSTICE!

America must serve the greater good of the many. Not just the corporate share holders and the "robber barrons."

Do the right thing FCC. I am a shareholder in the expansive goodness of America. Represent me, please.

I AM A FIRST GENERATION AMERICAN, MY FAMILY EMIGRATED TO THE U.S. IN THE EARLY 1900'S FROM RUSSIA BECAUSE THEY WANTED THEIR CHILDREN TO LIVE IN A FREE COUNTRY WHERE RACE, RELIGION, AND ETHNIC BACKGROUND DID NOT MATTER. MY MATERNAL GRANDPARENTS RAISED ME TO BELIEVE THAT I WAS SO LUCKY TO LIVE IN THIS COUNTRY AND ALTHOUGH THERE WERE TIMES WHEN I DID NOT LIKE WHAT OUR GOVERNMENT DID MOSTLY I WAS VERY PROUD TO BE AN AMERICAN AND I WORKED FOR MORE THAN 20 YEARS FOR DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATES. HOWEVER, WHEN I THINK THAT MY RIGHTS TO LISTEN TO WHAT RADIO SHOWS I WANT TO HEAR, WATCH WHAT I WANT ON TELEVISION IT MAKES ME VERY ANGRY. I AM VERY GLAD THAT MY GRANDPARENTS DID NOT LIVE TO SEE WHAT THE COUNTRY THEY LOVED AND RESPECTED SO MUCH HAS CHANGED INTO SOMETHING VERY CLOSE TO A DICTATORSHIP. FOR THE RECORD INCASE SOMEONE WANTS TO ARREST ME FOR BEING A TRAITOR I AM AN 81 YEAR OLD, DISABLED WOMAN AND I WOULD NOT GO QUIETLY.

Ladies and Gentlemen of the FCC,

This is your Golden Opportunity, the one you’ve been waiting for ALL YOUR WORKING LIVES: you can FINALLY be awarded The Freedom Award by keeping the internet wireless airwaves free to the American People. I know it goes against your greedy, grasping, give-me-the-money character but for once BE A PATRIOT. Keep the airwaves for the public good. Do it for Mom and Apple Pie, do it for God and Country, do it for the possibility that on Judgement Day much can be overlooked by a few good deeds.

Sincerely,

The air ways belong to the people of this country, they should not be sold to the highest bidder, or any bidder, they should not be for sale. They must be used to provide affordable high-speed internet to every one, regardless of where they live. The current administration seems to want to give the whole country over to corporate America, and to International corporations. This is a mistake of the first order. Do Not sell the public airwaves to any company.

When we privatize the public airwaves, selling them to the highest bidder, we assure that any communication service that uses those airwaves will be priced to recoup a profit and retire the debt from the initial sale. Worse the endless cycle of leveraged buyouts and refinancings to maximize shareholder returns over time will assure that America will have the highest priced communications services in the world. With communications becoming the largest overhead cost of American business, we are setting ourselves up to have the highest business overhead costs in the world. If that sounds to you like a smart way to make American enterprise competitive in a global economy, you’re nuts.

As a Citizen, Taxpayer, & Voter, I must demand in the strongest possible terms that the FCC act to protect MY interests, and those of the rest of the Citizenry, and NOT hand over the bulk of the Public's airwaves to a handful of rapacious, corporate entities! You must not sacrifice the Public's holdings and the Common Good for the enrichment & disproportionate empowerment of the few!! The wireless Internet market is becoming the People's information and communication nexus, and must not be handed over to be controlled by those whose morality, ethics, and actions are defined only by the profit motive!

I believe that the FCC and the government have a responsibility to promote the public good rather than giving the public spectrum to the highest bidder, no strings attached. The broadband Internet market is in no way a “free market”, and, left alone, it will not serve the public good. The government should require that, as a minimum, winners of the upcoming spectrum auction maintain Network Neutrality (as explained by savetheinternet.com) on the purchased spectrum.

I also believe that it would not be in the public good to allow a few large telecommunications companies to control all of the newly available spectrum. Wireless Internet has great potential, but it will not come to fruition if these few companies simply add the spectrum to their own proprietary services. Perhaps the spectrum purchasers should be required to make available a significant percentage of the spectrum for use at reasonable rates by smaller companies. After all, this is public spectrum held for the public good. The government has the right and responsibility to implement rules about its use.

Don't sell out the public air waves to the big cable and phone companies. All citizens should have access to quality high speed internet at a low cost. They are right, you know. The air, common as it is, is a public property of human beings, and as such must be openly accessible to all. At the same time, I believe it requires good governance to assure abuse is kept to a minimum, and "beaming highspeed signals" everywhere is ALSO something that needs regulation – just not the kind that ends up monopolizing access. The public airways belong to us, the public. I am against a private company controlling those airways. The goals of private companies are to meet a bottom line profit and if those margins are not met, the public and small groups will pay more for services. This pattern is well established across the communications industry. Competition has not brought down consumer costs but are carefully hidden in surcharges.

<td>Every time I turn around, there's something to protect that gives my life a modicum of value. In every case, it's not a terrorist that's threatening me, it's my own government. John McCain initiated changes in media ownership so that we now have media conglomerates instead of voices of individuals. It's all about who can make the most money and have the most power. It's not about serving the people who are the citizens of this country. Do not endorse a bill that will further limit our communications to a few greedy companies. We need our public airwaves - not private greed. We are watching, we are waiting for your vote. Should you care, you will listen to what I and millions of others are saying. We know who you are by your actions. Support the people you vowed to serve not private interest corporate groups.</td>

In June, the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) will make a major decision: Use the public airwaves for the public good. Do not turn them over to big companies who will stifle competition, innovation, and the wireless Internet revolution. Please mandate that whoever wins the auction cannot stifle competition and innovation.

Sirs, I regard the EMF public bandwidth as a nationally held natural resource, much like the Nations Parks and wildlife Preserves. As such (and as these frequencies have been historically treated) to assign them to private use will be similar to clearcutting the forests. The forests may grow back, in a generation or so, but the Nation will never recover the bandwidth if privatized.

The public airwaves have for too long been turned over to private interests, which increasingly does not bode well for the public. It’s time that the ownership of the air waves by the public as originally set aside for public interest and use be returned to that posture eliminating monied interests which put forth trash programming increasingly, which does not serve the public well. Now we have them at the trough once again seeking to control the internet providing service, but at inflated prices and poor service to boot. This chicanery must end and public service and public needs be raised as the determining factor in deliberations.

They call it the free market. We know it's just more giveaways for the rich, who, when unregulated, NEVER act in the public interest. There is absolutely no evidence that telecommunications conglomerates have ever acted in the public interest except when forced to do so.

The principle of public access has guided the Internet since its infancy, and there is no question that it is the major reason for the phenomenal growth of creative, scientific, and economic activity online.

To allow companies to rule these airwaves is to stifle technological innovations of the future.

The Internet, like the highway, is a public good that should be provided equally to all, not preferentially to the rich and powerful.

The government has given too much away as it is. What is good for a business is NOT always good for a democracy. The airwaves must be protected if our democratic way of life is to continue.
The FCC has already given away too many of the public’s rights by favoring corporate interests in more & more corporate control of all forms of communication. Enough is enough!

Here in America we have a right to free, just competition. The fact that you have already established your companies in no way absolves you from your responsibilities as American citizens to keep competition open and available to others. Shame on you.

When are the people going to be put ahead of the big companies? If they are allowed to do this it will only stifle growth and hold back technology. The FCC and all governmental entities need to start using some common sense for a change - the sooner the better - before we end up becoming a third world nation. Government for the people, by the people, need to stop letting big companies run this country for their own gain. These actions will have a serious backlash. These are our airwaves. I don’t want corporations controlling them. Political campaigns now cost money to be broadcast on the airwaves. All of the tv and radio campaigns should be public announcements and should be free for all candidates including third party candidates unless we want to stifle competition as the Democrats and Republicans are doing. And we still don’t get balanced reporting either on commercial radio or public radio and public tv. I don’t hear the announcers comparing the programs of all of the candidates like they should except rarely on public radio. All I hear on public radio is Mitt Romney is a good candidate because he has a good executive look and he has a good election team. Then they tell me how much money Hillary Clinton has raised and how much Barak Obama has raised and that Obama was at a Hollywood party last night. This is unbelievably terrible. Fortunately Chai Risdal of npr saved the day a little bit by interviewing someone knowledgeable on health care who somewhat compared the healthcare plans of Hillary Clinton, Barak Obama and John Edwards. That is horrible reporting. With this kind of track record these news stations and corporations don’t need more airwaves. Their licenses should be taken away and we should start all over with people serious in getting the news out.

In the past six years we have surrendered vast numbers of our basic rights under the Bush doctrine. The media is controlled by the administration regarding disseminating information on the progress of the war in Iraq, economic trends, the stripping away of environmental protections, etc. Today, we live in a totalitarian society, run by a dictator who is nothing but a figurehead puppet for the true controlling group of war mongering profiteers. Now, you envision taking away another freedom, the public airways. These venues are our last bastion of free expression, and you have no right to suppress that simply because I don’t happen to agree with the corrupt tactics dealt by this administration. And, trust me...I do not agree with the Bush lies and deceit! From the pre-emptive war to the massive tax cuts for his rich friends...none of it! So, don’t even think about stripping away one of the last bits of free expression we still have.

The cost of internet access and cable tv at home keep going up. The "competition" among companies is a farce. Any time I want to change I have to buy new equipment and or pay initiation fees. The FCC should maintain airwaves for the public good for all the public at public expense (government, taxes) to assure access for ordinary people.

The FCC’s continued weakness and deregulation puts us all at the mercy of corporations. Stop turning the public trust into a private concern. The FCC needs to concentrate on ensuring that these public “spaces” stay public. Stand up for the people not the corporations, be the guardian you were meant to be. Don’t let another public forum be turned into a “vast wasteland.”

I am sick and tired of being sick and tired of seeing public resources being given away to private ’enterprise’! This reminds me of the LAND GRABS of the 1800’s, where families fought for a few acres while railroad barons got all they wanted for free or for pennies on the acre: in return for promises that all would benefit. Hogwash, and I don’t believe it now. Stop the giveaways. Put it on hold until the public has a chance to get educated about this, and we get a chance to vote to result in truly responsive officials.

There is a reason public airwaves are called PUBLIC.

I live in rural Wisconsin with local Verizon service that is marginal at best and satellite internet that is very expensive and still pretty slow but the only service I can get. Dial-up comes in at 12-14 bps which was the speed in 1985. Looking forward to inexpensive, high speed internet service like others in this country.

There is not enough public presence on the airwaves. Do not set up the corporations as gatekeepers of the internet. We finally have a system which is the internet which allows the free democratic flow of information so needed in our modern society. Please keep the airwaves out of corporate control and keep the access to the internet freely in the hands of the people. We will benefit from this by having a healthier dialogue of information with out controls such as corporate, monetary or political. Our great country needs the free flow of information to survive and thrive. thanks

I am SICK of paying high prices for the terrible internet services we receive from Comcast and AT&T BRAGS about having the fewest dropped calls but the services they do offer leave a whole lot to be desired. Basic cell phone packages cost well over $40 a month and if you want other basic options like texting, you need to pay an extra $5 a month. What a CROCK!!! Our cable services cost over $120 a month and there have been many, many occasions where internet service/cable services were disrupted or not working at all!!! Why must we pay outrageous prices for services that don't deliver! Let some new competition into the market so we can have better options to choose from.

Don’t let one more of OUR resources become just another corporate asset. The more that utilities and other monopolies, near-monopolies, and virtual monopolies have been de-regulated, the more the American consumer has received the shaft. Prices are up, choices are down, and service is non-existent. Customer service has been out-sourced to places like India, where English is spoken in accents which are difficult to understand and customer ”service” reps have no understanding of our needs and priorities. As a result, American jobs have become non-American jobs. Satisfaction has plummeted, but there are no real alternatives, so the alleged competitive market-place does not drive under-performers out of business. They simply reap more and more massive corporate profits. Don’t give them this resource. The airwaves are OURS; they should be used for OUR benefit.

Do not forget you are working in a nation which is owned by The People. Remember the Constitution of these United States? Bide by it and you will see these airwaves are not yours to give away, legislate away from the populace, or otherwise pillage for specific corporate greed.

The airwaves belong to us, not corporations!
Hands off!

The airwaves are a public resource. Media and communications companies treat them like private property. Government has an important role to play to ensure that public goods remain readily accessible and serve the public interest.

The public airwaves should be for the public good, not corporate greed.

The internet needs to remain free.

The PBS stations exist for the PUBLIC. They need to stay that way. They should not be given over to private industry and privatised just like ev-everything else the government seems to be doing these days. I want the PBS stations to stay FREE so they can do the programs the regular channels cannot do.

Having increased airwaves available to the com-community could revolutionize our society and our democracy. I’m highly in favor of setting aside additional airwaves

Open communication is a fundamental prerequisite for democracy, as recognized in the first amendment. In a world which has consistently trended towards greater monopolization of communications media by a few major corporate holders, the internet is a crucial counterdevelopment. Joann And Harry

The first and most critical need the FCC must address is assigning spectrum to first responders so they can achieve interoperability around the country.

The second issue in allocating this range of spectrum is leaving the door open for new technologies and new providers. No more than 70% of the (non-first responder) spectrum should be offered to current providers.

Finally, this spectrum is a highly valuable asset which belongs to the American people. The "reserve bid" in whatever form of auction the FCC uses should be set high enough to ensure that appropriate bids are received.

As most people in public life know, this country lags behind most other industrialized countries in the easy and low-cost availability of high-speed internet. High-speed internet is no longer a luxury. For more and more Americans, it is no longer optional, as more and more of us use it professionally, and for a multitude of personal uses, from paying bills, to taking higher education courses, to participating in public discussions—such as this one.

PLEASE—Protect the public good—as you are sworn to—and respect the American public’s need for easy and efficient access to this century’s focal means of communication, the internet. Again, most other industrialized countries have moved substantially ahead of us in securing high-speed access for their citizens. Why must we accept second-class status, simply to benefit private capital?

Please act now. The country is watching—and waiting.

Before the 1940’s we all had access to the radio. It was used for education, religious and union broadcasts. This was then given to commercial broadcasters at no charge.
We are now about to do the same. The airwaves should be LEASED to broadcasters and the money used for education in each state, for the COMMON GOOD not the good of already obscenely rich corporations and the people that run them.

The government has no right to give away so easily the patrimony of its citizens for the benefit of the few corporations involved. You work for the general public, support that public by doing the right thing - PUBLIC AIRWAYS TO BE USED FOR THE PUBLIC GOOD!

When I moved to the U.S. in 1967, the country was still in its fear of communism and tuberculosis. Small box was fading, although we had to be vaccinated in order to renter after a holiday to a nation that had had less frequent outbreaks than this country. We were bemused, but made America allowances, for there was so much good and hopeful. Like freedom of speech etc. The freaky fear of things is so American. We are now totally freaked out about terrorism. It is all consuming. It is a business opportunity to be realized. It is a wonderful tool for a politician. What I can't understand is why there is no general, public fear of corporate take over of something as important as the air waves. Does monopoly of broadcasting not translate into mass control? Good God. I'm now scared for the first time.

This is an outrage the likes of which we have never witnessed in the history of this once-great nation. STOP! We, The People, pay the salaries of all our public servants and the FCC, Congress, and Senate had better recognize who’s BOSS. Our Airwaves must be preserved and maintained EXCLUSIVELY FOR THE PEOPLE OF THIS COUNTRY. We, The People, FORBID the FCC from stealing from us. PacBell/SBC/ATT, Verizon and Comcast have spread enormous amounts of money around DC. Why not? A relatively small investment in buying politicians pays back better than actually providing the faster internet service they always talk about. The airwaves are the property of the American people not the FCC, or the major corporations. The FCC is supposed to be working in the best interests of the American people, protecting their airwaves not selling them out to the big telecommunications companies. Even the mere consideration of such a move reveals something sinister lurking within the FCC.

Keep the wireless internet market free for the good of the public. Thanks.

I am an academic. My use of e-mail does not produce money, but it does create and disseminate knowledge. The U.S. government, its citizens, and its business community must protect free access to the growth of our educational potential, an area in which we are falling behind. Free internet access has been one of the most promising media to raise the level of American education. Please keep this new and amazing resource free. It stands along with the best that democracy has to offer.

You, representing the FCC, have some serious philosophical issues to face. While the future of technology and the resultant vector upon society are unknown, it is clear that open technology strategies will prevail. To license bandwidth to private corporations which could be managed by an open technical standard is a big mistake. The FCC should be in the business of granting these slivers of bandwidth by open standard rather than by blood-sucking huge corporations whose only wish is to derive profit and thus control over the public. To protect the public interest over these fascinating resources overlaps with an interest in future technologies. This future is of superior quality when small corporations have access as well and thus the open standard will prevail. The personal computer is a strong instance of this paradigm. Quality capitalism is not served by a ring of two or three competitors who shove out all smaller influences. You are the organization, not the corporations. The boundary should be clear and in every deal that is cut with the big feeders that boundary is displayed as flawed. No preferential treatment means upholding open standards.

Let us begin with the basics of democracy. We have separation of church and state. We have basic freedoms; privacy, speech, etc... We have a balance of power, you know; legislative, judicial and administrative. And then, if you had not heard, is the famous and fabled Fourth Estate. That is the media. Keep Public Airwaves for the Public Good!

Taber Shadburne
Oakland, CA 94607
The federal government is on the verge of turning over a huge portion of our public airwaves to companies like AT&T, Verizon, and Comcast—who will use them for private enrichment instead of the public good.

These newly available airwaves are a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to revolutionize Internet access—beaming high-speed signals to every park bench, coffee shop, workplace, and home in America at more affordable prices than current Internet service. Phone and cable companies don't want this competition to their Internet service—they’d rather purchase the airwaves at auction and sit on them.

In June, the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) will make a major decision: Use the public airwaves for the public good, or turn them over to big companies who will stifle competition, innovation, and the wireless Internet revolution. We’re urging the FCC to mandate that whoever wins the auction cannot stifle competition and innovation.

Please keep our airwaves open to public good. Once the big companies get ahold of them we will ALL have to pay. Don’t let that happen. Thank you.

The air waves belong to the people and as long as they were used to provide us with the truth we didn’t mind corporation having control. However, instead of being a voice of truth and reason they have become an arm of the executive branch producing propaganda not truth. While it appears this may be normal operating practices since the beginning of the cold war, it time it stops.

If the internet is the only way we can find the truth, then it needs to be available to all. The fees that are being charged by the corporation make high speed cable, dsl, or satellite internet beyond the reach of most people. The price of telephone, cell phone, cable or satellite, or long distance is outrageous. Since the air wave belong to the people, the corporation should share the profits from their use with the people and/or specific bandwidth should be outside the corporate realm. Additionally, since the corporation can not be trusted to report the news in it’s commercial environment all corporate broadcaster should be required to give up a specific percentage of their broadcast time to non commercial news outside the influence of the corporation, with editorial boards to assure truth not propaganda and both sides of issues are reported.

It’s time to give the people inexpensive access to internet and remove the news from corporate commercialization.

The equal time for political opponent messages also needs to be reinstated.

While I get broadband internet relatively cheap, 768kB/sec for $18 a month, I think it should be less than that, and there should not be such a gulf in prices between what's available. Most areas have nothing between $10/month for dialup and $45/month for broadband. That really sucks. Cable and phone companies are monopolizing internet access. Thus I believe that government should regulate these companies so that consumers have more choices.

Very little space is left for independent, non-commercial use of broadcasting – either TV or radio. We need to preserve whatever air space is left for non-commercial communications. Too often, it seems that there is nothing left that is not for sale – Please preserve this precious remainder.

This is a very important issue to me. Bandwidth BELONGS to the people and MUST be deployed for the good OF the people. When are you going to stop being a sellout? The internet is a utility, like water and power, we need to ween it out of private hands. The notion that the free market can solve every problem is true, to an extent. Sometimes the price for the solution is a higher then we are willing to pay. If you withhold water and power from a group of households because they can’t afford exhorbinant rates, those households will suffer unfairly to those who can. If Americans would lose their ready access to water or power a societal meltdown would occur. The access the internet is fast becoming an integral part of our society. I’m not saying it is as important as water or power, but this is the information age, to exculde people from information pool would set the grounds for future divisions that will strech our way of life to the breaking point. That is not what a government is there to do. It is for the people, by the people, and needs to protect the basic freedoms that allow an individual to use the system to grow beyond his beginnings. Water, warmth, acces to knowledge.

The current freely available airwaves are choking. With so many devices all sharing the same space we are going to start hurting innovation. There can really only be just so many devices using the same frequency. Allowing public use of the airwaves will help innovation and drive our technological advancement. Big companies are not the source innovation. It is the small inventor that can’t afford to purchase the desired frequencies just to try out an idea. If we can learn one lesson from our technological past it is that the community builds the foundation of our future. Corporations purchase innovation for mass utilization and profit.

The airways belong to we, the people. A politically motivated body such as the FCC should not be able to auction off what belongs to ALL of us.
his issue is even more important for rural western counties that face the loss of land lines while at the same time cell-towers are too pricey to build. I don't fault the cell-tower companies, at the cost of towers vis-a-vis the numbers that need to be erected to pass through basalt and granite vis-a-vis the numbers of potential customers. It is imperative that we maintain land lines in rural areas. For this we need an impartial FCC not an agency owned by the large providers.

No more big business control over our airwaves. This is becoming a huge issue. The U.S. is now a second tier country in internet access. That’s right, the greatest superpower in the history of the world is not in the top 10 in internet access. Allowing the major telecommunications companies to control this vital resource is taking a step backward in just one more area of the worlds leadership that we seem to not care about. Well, guess what, we do care. It is very important that we keep the airwaves competitive and innovative. This will not happen if we continue down the path of giving all media and airwave control to a small number of giant corporations with their own agendas.

Keep the airwaves free!

Thomas Martin

All telecommunications frequencies begin as public property. As such, they are not to be disposed of in any manner other than that best suited to the public interest. Private corporations exist to make profit, not to serve the public good (other than incidentally). We Americans have never gotten fair prices for the frequencies already sold off - don’t make this mistake again!

I fully support the statement sent to me by Moveon.Org, and would urge teh FCC to not take the easy and obviously pro-business road. Please don’t sell off any public airwaves and frequencies to private enterprise. As I recall, an earlier auction of airwaves was done, and it too had aspects to it that appeared to be giveaways to big business at the expense of the public good. Think through carefully the implications of such auctions and how the FCC can attempt to control the inevitable stifling of competition and innovation.

It's time to start thinking about the public good again. The past several years have been a major giveaway of the govt. to the corporate world. The airwaves should be used for public good, not for the profits of a few. I am a Verizon and Comcast customer and believe that the monopolies being built by these companies should be stopped.

Stop this continuing control of the people's airwaves. Democracy needs free public TV and Radio and all communication to supply news with different views and opinions. This is like Big Brother (without paranoia—just reality. How much money for ads from the controlling media is enough to make from the people and how much news of Brittany Spears and Paris Hilton and no analysis of the money it would cost and save to have health care or stop this illegal war?

Access to information and information technology is fundamental to any functioning democracy–here in the US and globally. Corporate control of the airwaves entrenches the commodification of communication and information sharing, and threatens to limit the diversity of users and the exchange of ideas. The internet represents an amazing and potentially leveling tool for education, communication, mobilization and transformation. Affordability should not pose an obstacle to access, and big corporations must not be allowed to dictate the distribution of information technology, or to profit from enforced exclusivity. Keep the public airwaves open to innovation and competition for the public good!

Mike Dow

A provision requiring "placed in service for the benefit of the general public as a whole" within a limited timeframe, with verifiable capital expenditures, and penalties for not performing must be included in the contract or license award. Evaluation at time of bid must include a detailed analysis of the intended use and service provided, along with capital plan and schedule for implementation.

Please keep the public airways in the public's hands. We already pay too much for cable and phone services.

Vesna Breznikar

There are many innovative companies ready to forge ahead with the wireless Internet revolution bringing us high-speed wireless networks from coast to coast and all sorts of innovative wireless devices. Don’t let the old phone and cable companies block this progress. They will stifle the development of new wireless devices by only letting their own endorsed products work on their networks.

I urge the FCC to protect the public good by setting auction rules that prohibit this anti-competitive behavior. If the government auctioned off the right to maintain a public highway to Ford, we wouldn’t let Ford block Toyotas from the roads. They also shouldn’t be able to tell their wireless Internet customers which websites they can access as they do now. Cell and wireless companies should not be able to dictate which phones or wireless devices people use on their networks. The opportunity to revolutionize the Internet and wireless world is at our fingertips – don’t sell our progress to the big monopolies.

We cannot afford to protect big telecom companies at the price of falling behind the global technology market. European and Asian consumers already enjoy new wireless technologies well before Americans do, because their governments have chosen to make spectrum access competitive. It’s past time we do the same.

The FCC’s charter is to manage the market to benefit the true owners of the airwaves - the people of this country. Allowing spectrum squatting in these new bands would be a disgraceful betrayal of the public’s trust.

It's time for the FCC to protect the public's airwaves for the benefit of the public and not for the benefit of private companies. I hold a lot of AT&T stock and still don't think this is a good idea.

As a consumer I must object to private companies making money on public airways. As always it will hurt the public, stifle competition, and be costly for those who can afford it least. In addition, each time a large corporation takes control, I find that the quality of the technology decreases, problems and incorrect billing increases and service goes out the door. Please stop robbing American of their public airways and rights - keep the internet open and free.

The frequency spectrum of electromagnetic airwaves belongs to the free world—not to any special interest groups selected by the US government who then can manipulate and control pricing and competition for their own greedy profits. To do so is totally against the principles of free enterprise in our democracy. Shame on the US Government. The airwaves are intended for the public good—not for selfish profit making giants such as Comcast, AT&T, Verizon. FCC—Shame, shame on you!

The Airwaves are a common wealth and needs to be managed for the benefit of the people and democracy and not for business at the price to the people and our democracy. Mandate that whatever commercial interests use the public airwaves do so in a way to provide for democracy and its free speech and does not stifle real competition and innovation.

Keep pubic airwaves public.

Our public airwaves are not a commodity to be sold off to private interests to control for their own commercial gain: they are public space to be reserved for public use. The fact that so much of our public airwaves are already privately and irresponsibly controlled for private gain does not justify further private conquest of our public space.

We need MORE competition in the Wireless space, not inside deals for the large existing players!

Just once it would be nice if our government officials worked for the public instead of private corporations. Keep the Public Airways out of Private Hands!

Keeping our airwaves public will serve the public good, and help strengthen our democracy.

The public airwaves need your protection. PLEASE do not hand them over to companies like AT&T.

It's unreasonable to expect the companies that are most threatened by public access to wireless technology to make decisions that benefit society at the expense of their own bottom line.
Don't let the multi-media giants swallow even more bandwidth and control of our sources for information. Keep these bandwidths for the PUBLIC!

Public airwaves for the "public" good (not the "corporate" good). Why the public good? Look at your own complaint file. The corporate interests who hope to benefit from your largesse have some of the worst (and biggest) complaint files — complaints that FCC does not have time staff or resources to solve. Why add to those headaches? I used to be an AT&T customer. I used to be a Verizon customer. I am likely to soon have been a Comcast customer. When customer service is so far away that even simple problems can't be resolved without hours of wasted discussion with an across-the-country (or overseas) customer rep, no one is being served except that corporation's profiteers.

The FCC is supposed to be the guardian of the public’s airwaves to serve them as a free communication medium. Instead the FCC has sold out to the corporate maggots who not only stifle competition but present content designed to advance their pecuniary objectives. The FCC should not be known as—For Corporate Compensation.

Stop giving away the citizens’ resources to corporations who have no allegiance to improving our lives; their allegiance is to make money. You could at least keep these available to improve internet access across this country since you did not hold the telecom industry to their word... to build a fiber optic network across this country so EVERYONE can have fast internet. Do something for us, for once.

It is really an outrage! The public airwaves belong, believe it or not, to the public.. The idea of selling off even a portion is anti-democratic, in my opinion. At a time when the United States should be setting an example for the rest of the world by making the internet accessible to everyone, not only those who can pay a premium for it. Schools, libraries, entrepreneurs, small businesses and students are only some of the groups/individuals that would benefit from a truly public ”meeting place”. This advance in access to a world of information can contribute to our country moving ever onward to a much greater destiny than we can probably even now imagine. Please so not take this possibility away from the American people and give it away to corporations who would act only in self interest, not the good of the citizenry.

It's despicable the way this country is becoming a plutocracy. Big companies are just swallowing smaller ones, becoming monopolies all over the country. Government is supposed to protect the interests of the general population and the poor. Instead, it seems its only purpose is to protect big, powerful corporations and make them richer and more powerful. It's very sad but I see democracy really vanishing, fading away on behalf of big conglomerates whose only purpose is to get wealthier and wealthier, with no regards for the consumer. Is there no limit to their greed? When is the government going to step in and protect the general population from these "sharks"?

This is an easy way for you to make an enormous difference in the world while providing one free service for the citizens of this country. Our forefathers were very enlightened in creating the Constitution. Let's keep in their footsteps.

The U.S. must lead by example. Ensuring our democracy is strong and true can only be done my making certain the public airwaves do much more to insure our liberties and security are held fast. Frequencies must be reserved to allow our police, fire and other vital public services to freely communicate in any emergency. We need many more public radio stations so mandatory public safety and security can be returned. Many cities have radio stations with satellite signals and absentee owners so that the populace remains vulnerable with no civil defense communication capabilities. The over-commercialization and religious uses of too many frequencies at the expense of basic public services is wrong. Priorities must be given to the common good of all before any private purposes are served. The same thing holds true for the internet. Balance must be restored. Please make the public number one for a change!

In a country of, for and by the people, we have an information system which is accessible by EVERYONE, regardless of their economic situation. I urge you to not only keep public airwaves public, I'd like to see a law that says they can never be owned by a profit-making entity. I presently have AT&T phone service and they are such a conglomerate that trying to get a representative on the phone is a full-time job. And get this: I live in Los Angeles and cannot get high-speed internet through AT&T! Their switching station is 200' short and they will not do anything to provide my residence with high-speed internet. This has been a problem for my family for 4 years now. We are the only ones in our neighborhood who do not have high-speed internet, yet we all have AT&T.

There are countless people who could benefit from increased wi-fi access, not the least of which are people who may be able to afford to scrape up enough funds to buy laptop computer equipment secondhand, but otherwise do not have the financial werewithal to purchase an internet-access subscription. They should have the same unfettered access to the airwaves that they OWN (along with the rest of us) that more economically advantaged people do.

I have a hard time believing these days that a big conglomerate will do anything for the public good. The public should have access to these airwaves too.
We should NOT be dictated to about what we can and cannot use.
By letting the big companies have access to these new airwaves, gives the public LESS choices and at the same time we have to pay MORE for using them. NOT good for the Public. Thank you,

There are few places the public can find a variety of views at present. The mass media is already owned by a few, so that little room exists for divergent points of view.

As a "federal" agency, please do something for "the people" for a change. Keep the airwaves away from big companies and actually allow the people to have something that works and doesn't break the bank. For so long we have endured paying the price for cell service for safety's sake only to have it cut out just when you need it. We pay and pay and pay for every little thing in this country and it is usually inferior, but doesn't have to be. Let's turn that around.

The US government made a brilliant decision when it designated the left hand of the broadcast dial "public." That part of the radio dial is now the only place to hear engaging community programming. The current FCC should follow the intelligent civic-minded example of its predecessors and reserve a generous section of the band for not-for-profit, community programming.

I feel strongly about this issue. More and more technology becomes integral for keeping up with life in the “modern” competitive world. If there is a way to make the technological playing field more even it would make a real difference in equaling educational opportunities for kids. In addition, I think maximizing access as opposed to maximizing profit is a gesture that says that as a nation we believe that people are a resource that is worth investing in. If we fail to make sure that our whole nation is technologically savvy, we will fall behind other nations in this respect. Please consider investing in our people as opposed to our companies.

Why would the government want to take something that is free to all citizens and hand it over to a group of businesses to use for private gain? The only logical answer is the personal profit of individual legislators or government officials. The FCC has an OBLIGATION to protect public airways for PUBLIC use – and NOT to give those airways away to private entities for PRIVATE PROFITS.

Please do now allow additional spectrum to be bought by private concerns.
I have watched the broadcast industry successfully get out of an obligation to donate free airtime to qualifying endeavors (Decennial Census advertising, election campaigns, etc.) as payment for the privilege of using the public airways. It is amazing what you can accomplish in this country if you donate a little cash to politicians. The result has been more expensive censuses, political campaigns that have become so expensive that only the wealthy can compete or have influence and office holders have a great advantage in elections. Allowing this further betrayal of the trust we place in our government institutions would be unforgiveable.

The days of quietly betraying the public trust are over. With young activist organizations and the communication capabilities of the internet, you will turn over our airwaves at your peril.

Access to information is essential in today’s world, and the internet provides instant access to more information than would ever have been thought possible even 10 years ago. You have a chance to enable all American voices through your decision on releasing the public airwaves for wireless Internet access. Or, you have the chance to destroy and limit most of those voices in favor of a few powerful ones. Please do the right thing: allow the public use the “public airwaves” to access the knowledge and power of the Internet. Enable all Americans to use the ’Net for positive enterprises, sharing knowledge and for communication.

As a Comcast customer, I am very much against allowing my Internet and Cable Television service provider to have even more control of my access to the Internet. Indeed, the problem is that too few companies have too much power and control over Internet access. The release of the public airwaves for ubiquitous wireless Internet usage would be a major step in breaking the control of such companies. This model is already in use in many other countries, including Europe. Please do not let the US slide further down in the rankings of countries with a lesser percentage of its citizens having broadband Internet access. We are already near the middle of the pack. Let’s not step further back and cede ground to the rest of the world.

Thank you for your support and for hearing my comment.

Do not allow these companies a free hand. They are interested in the lowest common denominators: pure profit and cut-throat competition. Any pretense that they have any interest in free speech, freedom of expression, unbiased news and information and/or education is just that, a pretense. They are far more interested in promoting gossip and propaganda than ethics or the welfare of the human race. Giving these hucksters control of the airways is another step toward pollution of the collective consciousness and corporate dictatorship. DON'T DO IT!

Large corporations are trying to take over everything in the US. We cannot let them do this. The internet is an important tool to empower people, to inform them, and to give them easy access to each other. We must make this available for a low cost to everyone. Do not let big phone companies steal this opportunity from everyone. Let innovative companies use these airways to improve accessibility to all US residents.

This segment of the telecommunications industry is doing fine as is. Don’t ruin it by giving it to big corporations. Quality will decline over time and cost to consumers will rise concomitantly. Consider the results of Congressional legislation and FCC rulings regarding cable TV., I have yet to see competition in my area with lower costs. Do something right this time, for the public and not for private interests and shareholder scheming for ways to increase their outrageous incomes and benefits. Thank you,

As an professional Internet developer having access to the Internet is a crucial element in making sure the next generation continues to improve on the technology already available or sit back for another decades before every man, woman and child in America has access this world. There is no argument that the Internet is the future. So why block access to that future by selling it to Corporations that only tend of stoping us from using it? America made a miskate by waiting until now to deal with car pollution and look in the mess we are in? I say lets not make the same mistake with the Internet.

Wireless internet should be available to all people. Children are expected to have access to computers for homework assignments. And those computers need access to the internet for the pictures, maps, etc that teachers no longer accept if hand-drawn. It’s a different world we’re living in. Don’t let companies who only wish to grow richer get the chance to control access.

Dear FCC Commissioners,

As public servants, who are paid by the general public to act on behalf of all the American people, I respectfully request that you reconsider the goals of the original federal communications laws passed back in the 1930's, and make your decision based on those bedrock principles, i.e., that the airwaves belong to the public; those using them must act on behalf of the public good.

Respectfully,

The airwaves belong to US— the public! Private interests should only be allowed to use broadcast spectrum as long as they take serious steps to expand public access—with equal access to all parts of the internet, no restrictions! Those that fail to live up to these principles should have their license yanked, without delay. And competition from public-sector projects will help keep them honest. Keep the future of wireless broadband free, open, and with equal, neutral access for all!

You cannot deregulate in an atmosphere of oligopoly. It simply isn’t a good idea. City governments would be hindered by leasing these services from ISPs rather than have the city allow companies to provide it free of charge (Google) or publicly provided by the city (cheaper in the long run, although higher fixed cost for a city gov. in question). Either way no company can ever have full control over a given frequency especially if 2.4.

Public education and unbiased programming is the only way for many to succeed in this country. Eliminating that efficient forum will hurt the entire society, and helps to produce more dummy civilians, who eventually will subscribe to the most idiotic ideas. And all such tendencies will result in more tragic brain drain of the country, and the eventual loss of the leader of the world status. Although money talks on every other media channel, give the talented poor a door to become assets instead of liabilities. Sincerely, a once poor civilian.

I am tired of the government turning over what should be public to private interests. The airwaves belong to the public. The taxpayer has already paid for the development of the Internet. It is time that the public gets to benefit from this resource, that has become such an important part of our personal and professional lives.

Megacorporations are no doubt licking their chops at the possibility of gaining ever more dollars as they invest in public airwaves. And once again the general public will be the loser as more and more communication power is vested in fewer and fewer hands. Please stop what amounts to a giveaway of public trust. Quit trying to give away our public assets so that individuals and corporations can enrich themselves. These assets could be leased yet retained and the money from the leases could be used to offset taxes etc.

By conglomerating assets and then selling them to create virtual monopolies (or oligopolies) the FCC has destroyed public assets and concentrated power to just a few too many times. Are there no lessons to learn? Or does the fact that lucrative careers are in your future influence these decisions?

Please support the principles that promote creativity and innovation for the technological future of our country. Help to implement policies that support the wisest and broadest thinking in designing the technological foundation that will provide the most opportunity with the least bureaucracy and constraints. Use this moment in time as a way to set the right agenda for future technological exploration and development while minimizing the amount of obstruction to free innovation and avoiding monopolistic situations that would inhibit some of the best thinking and flow of ideas.

We’re already being choked with fees and rising costs.
The FCC made a huge mistake between 1994 and 2001 when it auctioned off huge blocks of RF spectrum to large corporate interests (for paltry sums). Imagine the outcry if the National Park Service decided to auction off 1/3 of all national parklands to developers for $17 billion – but because this vital public asset is less tangible, there was less public complaint. But history will remember this sale as a monumental mistake – when assets that rightfully belong to our children were stolen from them.

Now the FCC is poised to repeat the same shortsighted mistake. It's ill-considered effects can easily be moderated by rules that would prevent purchase of airwaves to stifle competition – a strict "use it or lose it" requirement.

I urge the FCC to adopt such rules at once!

I was taught that the airways belong to the people. I have two landline phone numbers, a cell phone service, and DSL service with Verizon. I can say with authority that it’s a communication company that puts every obstacle in the way of communicating with them. This is a company that lost a class action suit for denying its customers receipt of foreign e-mail. I have no more love for the other companies being considered here. Their size and wealth makes them too powerful to entrust with this kind of power. They will not represent the best interest of the American people.

The public airwaves should be used for the public good. The government must protect our airwaves from corporate gatekeepers who would stifle innovation and competition in the wireless Internet market. I live in a rural area that is not serviced by ATT or other wifi. We are waiting to get access to high speed internet. Surely this will happen faster and more economically if the airwaves remain public.

Sally H Thomas

This is absolutely imperative. American democracy depends on a lively public dialog. Corporate control of airwaves is anathema to that dialog. We must support an active citizenry with ample public space for open discussion.

Public airwaves shouldn't be sold to private companies like National Forest, ocean, air and other inherently national treasures shouldn't be sold to private companies whose sole purpose is to make profit, regardless of any losses that public would incur as a result of the profit gaining process.

Please don't give away everything to big corporate conglomerates. These robber baron entities already control too many aspects of my life.

The existing commercial stations already produce enough junk and drivel. No more commercialization of the airwave!!

Please keep the public airways open to the public. We are a democracy and it is critical that our citizenry be informed.

Here's your opportunity to vote for the American citizens!

Please help stop our long history of giving in to private interests that which should remain public and free.

The public airwaves belong to all of us, not just the corporate giants. Put an end to their monopolies.

Public airwaves are one of the most democratic aspects of our nation today. It's important that you keep it that way.

Public airwaves should be just that, public. They should not be allowed to be monopolized by corporate conglomerates.

Please give the air in America to the American People, not to corporations that are so large that they are actually like nation-states themselves!

Keep our airwaves exactly that: OURS.

The airwaves belong to the people of North America NOT the corporate fatcats who seek profit and nothing more from the control they are seeking from the FCC. It is the FCC’s responsibility to regulate such actions, yet the FCC seems as corrupt as the Bush administration beholden only to the allegedly mighty dollar. Please remember your original purpose and remind AT&T, Comcast, and Verizon that the airwaves belong to us...NOT them, and they ought serve our good rather than their own. Grant them this electronic "land grab" and you'll join the rest of North America in paying the consequences.

This would be one of those times that the Establishment ought to concede something to the people if it truely desires to maintain its status quo. The illusion that the government ever does anything in the name of the people has been worn to the bone by the last few years of ultra conservative government. The politics that have been enacted of late have caused more poverty and unease and unwrest in the country than there has been since the sixties and seventies with the Vietnam war. If you leave the airwaves open to competition, I am confident that other ways will be found to control and dominate the consumer driven mentalities of our people today while maintaining the illusion that our "freedoms" of speech, information and communication have been preserved.

For America to stay ahead of - or just keep up with - the rest of the world, we need to drastically increase the level of education of our people. The overall poor quality of education here is already handicapping us. Universal free access to the Internet is a crucial factor. This is something that has been recognized by the visionaries who are developing a $100 wireless-capable nearly indestructible laptop to be distributed to poor children in rural and remote parts of the world. Please do not give away our airways and our future to private corporations trying to limit their need to innovate in order to stay competitive and profit at the expense of the best interest of our nation and its people.

My own personal experience has been one of paying an ISP for high speed DSL for 3 years before discovering that my telephone carrier (Verizon) intentionally limits the speed for Verizon phone customers using a non-Verizon internet service provider. Now I pay less, but have no access to higher speed unless I switch to Verizon, which I do not care to do.

Public airways must remain public. They should not be used by major corporations such as Verizon and Comcast for corporate gain. As a voter and taxpayer I insist that the airways remain available for all of us.

The public airwaves belong to the people. They are a public utility that needs to be regulated to ensure the common good of the people is properly served. Regulations were put in place when Western Union monopolized the telegraph wielding too much power over the media which led to unfair practices. These regulations were repealed during the Reagan administration and deregulation has built the media monster that we have today which encouraged the failed war we are in now and stifled the voice of descent. We now have an opportunity to make things right with the new media frontier. Let us please do the right thing here. This is huge. Bigger than the military industrial complex. Please believe me when I say that doing the right thing now will save us from a lot of trouble later.

It is critically important that what IS public, REMAIN public. That is particularly true of various communication vehicles – and, if public, NOT controlled by for-profit groups. Keep public airways public!!!!

Communication is key to our well being as a democratic nation. Corporations are not in the business of informing us or promoting completely open communication among the citizens of a country. They would only use the airwaves to tell us that we should buy their product or simply keep us too entertained to pay attention to the world around us. They are in the business to make money and only money not democracy. Keep the public property of the airwaves public.

Just as radio is free when people turn it on, so the internet should be free for people who have a computer. DO NOT permit the big companies AT&T and Verizon have the monopoly of charging us for its use. If you do not want to see another dissatisfied American public then let the internet stay free for u.

Don't help the fat cats to steal our airwaves!

Our country already lags behind other parts of the industrialized world in broadband technology and connectivity. Right wing capitalism is on the verge of destroying this country for the benefit of a few to the detriment of the majority. It is time for rethinking our humane priorities. Keep - and restore - the public airways and public broadcasting to restore the checks and balances we once had. Our government is doing the reverse of Chavez, and both extremes are illogical and cruel, and neither serve the needs or desires of the people.

Bill Hoff

The public airwaves, are, as its name implies, public, and should not be exclusively available for commercial exploitation by private corporate entities. The freeflowing exchange of thoughts and information is what put this nation at the forefront of developed economies and nations. Giving up this outlet for individuals to share ideas and knowledge would be a fundamental detriment to the future secured position of this country as one of the world’s leading nation. Private greed cannot justify such a fundamental sacrifice of the public good. It is therefore essential that the public airwaves remain public and are not auctioned off to private corporations such as Verizon or AT&T. If their business models no longer meet market needs they should not be able to eliminate competition by monopolizing access to the channels over which information is shared in this society. It is much rather, an important wake-up call for them to either adapt their way of doing business to new market realities, or then go the way all obsolete private companies go. Allowing these companies to monopolize access to the internet would thus not only be a blatant violation of current anti-trust regulations but in essence a violation of fundamental American values. I therefore urge you to uphold the basic values that make this country great and refrain from bending to corporate pressures. Keep the internet and our airwaves public. Future generations of workers, thinkers and business leaders will thank you.

Julia C. Reinhart

As a student and a teacher, it is required that I have access to the internet, which is not that easy, since it is not very affordable in my area. In order for my husband to apply to jobs, he needs the internet to communicate with potential employers, just like a telephone, we are expected to have this technology at our fingertips, but we are given no breaks when it comes to options and price. Many others I know who do not have access to the internet are left out of many opportunities that are offered only through internet access.

The public good and the private good (or maximization of short term corporate profit combined w/maximum externalization of real and social-environmental costs) are not the same. The FCC is supposed to act for the public good—all of the public, not just the proBush minority. I urge you to NOT turn over the bandwidth coming available to the private sector. A private telecommunications sector that's doing such a ripoff job that fewer Americans can or do have high speed internet access than Europeans do. More Europeans, have, on average, more access, faster access at lower cost. So don't turn it over to Verizon et al who will fatten their CEO's pay while doing very little for the public.

It's absolutely absurd that in the richest country in the world we have one of the worst access speeds to the internet. The phone and cable companies are the very ones who said they would invest in expanding the access and speed of how we get information. Well they have failed to do that, and gouging consumers for this is poor service needs to be stopped. Please consider the very people you are supposed to protect. That is us as citizens. The airwaves are a public resource and should remain in the public domain. To privatize this resource would be like privatizing the air itself. OK, well... maybe not as bad as privatizing all air. We saw how bad that turned out in Total Recall. But it would still be bad. The Internet has done much more for this country (business and private individuals) as a public resource than it would have had it been privatized from the start. The same will be true of the public airwaves. We'll all benefit from keeping the airwaves free. Thank you for your consideration.

The government must act in the best interest of the people when determining what is a "public good" – this is why entities such as the FCC exist. By selling airwaves to corporations, the government would be limiting the first amendment by providing preferential treatment to large conglomerates. This is a country founded upon ideals of personal freedom; let’s never forget that.

The Internet itself was created as a means of boosting commerce and entrepreneurship, and we have all benefited from what it has done for our economy. To turn these frequencies over to a handful of companies is to weigh in on the side of a few corporations (and their stockholders) against the rest of us. This issue is not just about freedom of speech – it’s about free markets as well.

Exactly how does it benefit the public good, to turn over access - and effective control - to private companies with bald financial agendas seeking to limit competition from other entities and technologies? What ever happened to less corporate intrusion in the lives of Americans? Or is that another old-think ‘conservative’ ideal, gone by the Beltway boards?

There needs to be more competitive pricing, especially cable TV. People should have options to subscribe to less channels to save money. My cable cost has nearly tripled in about 6 years. Communities give essentially monopolies to the cable companies.

Don't sell the airwaves to your buddies. You desire to privatize the airwaves will no doubt result in money effecting the choice of content. It is only on public radio that I heard how Parsons made a police academy in Iraq where the light fixtures leaked urine soaked feces. Where is the accountability there...and where would truth land if Haliburton owned stock in your private bc's? Huh?

Keep America free.

Please leave the public airwaves to the public! I'm tired of corporations attempting to gain more and more control over our lives. I guess it would be okay if that process was done for our own good but corporations are only interested in the bottom line not our well being. Simple as that!

Please keep the Internet tax-free and publicly ”owned.” Don’t let private companies try to contain the innovation and global change the Internet has offered. And, honestly, do you really think you’d be able to stop this revolution? Hackers and hacker-wanna-be’s would unite as never before. Be smart about this—the genie is out of the bottle! Embrace it!

This is another of the rare and vanishing opportunities to allow citizens unfettered access to a resource which could enrich private enterprise, business efficiency, education, personal, private and business communication, cultural exchange and so on – instead of enriching the corporations. The AIRWAVES are PUBLIC, not a resource for Big Money capital to buy, sell and exploit. Many millions of Americans already pay too much for access to cable TV and the internet. If these airwaves are auctioned, it will become even more costly to maintain open channels. South Korea, Japan and other nations lead the globe in wireless infrastructure. Millions of Americans struggle just to connect. Why make it any more difficult or expensive?

This is a situation that should not be allowed to occur. The Public Airways are just that, Public. To allow large companies and, yes I do actually hold stock in one of them, is an injustice to athe many taxpayers whose funds will be held captive to private corporations when in fact it is the Public’s airways that are in this instance going to line the profit margin pockets of a few at the cost of the many.

Please do not allow this to occur.

We live in a rural section of Minnesota and the only way we will ever have wide-band, high-speed internet is via wireless. The telco’s in our area claim that there is not enough of a customer base to support fiber-to-the-home or even to-the-community. Do not give away our only option for our future communications needs.

The era of unbridled greed on the part of multinational corporations is pauperizing the average American. The notion that what is best for corporate America benefits all Americans is a lie. IT SHOULD HAVE BECOME OBVIOUS SINCE THE REAGAN ADMINISTRATION’S OVERHAUL OF THE FCC THAT THE AIRWAVES TRULY HAVE BECOME THE VAST WASTELAND USED FOR NOTHING MORE THAN CORPORATE GREED. THE PUBLIC INTEREST, CONVENIENCE AND NECESSITY HAS BECOME ALMOST A NON-ENTITY. CONTINUING TO GIVE THE CORPORATIONS CARTE BLANCHE OVER THE AIR-WAVES LEADS TO THE END OF A DEMOCRATIC FORUM, IT DOES NOT ENHANCE IT. WAKE UP AND DO THE RIGHT THING. KEEP THE AIR-WAVES OPEN.

I am extremely disturbed that the federal government is planning to turn over a huge portion of our public airwaves to companies like AT&T, Verizon, and Comcast, profit-hungry corporations that will use them for private gain instead of the public good. The airwaves belong to the public, not corporations like Verizon and AT&T whose anti-competitive practices have resulted in the U.S. falling to 16th in the world in high-speed Internet rankings. The government must protect our airwaves from the same corporate gatekeepers that have stifled innovation and competition in Internet markets.

These newly available airwaves are a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to revolutionize Internet access—beaming high-speed Internet signals to every park bench, coffee shop, workplace, and home in America at more affordable prices than current Internet service. Of course, phone and cable companies don’t want this competition to their Internet service. Simon Wilkie, Director of Center for Communication Law and Policy at the University of Southern California, in a paper published on March 26, 2007, reported that dominant phone and cable companies intend to purchase the airwaves at auction and sit on them to keep competition out of the market.

There are many innovative companies waiting for the opportunity to forge ahead with the wireless Internet revolution, bringing us high-speed wireless networks from coast to coast and all sorts of innovative wireless devices. Unfortunately, the old phone and cable monopolies are aggressively trying to block this progress. These antiquated corporations have spent billions laying wires, and they enjoy having their customers, such as myself, locked in with few alternatives. Without paying for the laying of new cable myself, AT&T is unwilling to connect my residence for high-speed internet. On the best of days, I can connect via phone to the internet at 28.8 kbps. Two years ago, I lived in a location where the top speed was 21 kbps, but was frequently lower. For a location so close to San Francisco and Silicon Valley, one would expect much better, but PacBell, SBC, and now AT&T don’t have any incentive for upgrading phone lines or Internet service in rural communities or rural areas, unless there is competition.

To restore America’s leadership in high-speed Internet services, the FCC must ensure that the upcoming auction sets aside at least 30 MHz of spectrum for open and non-discriminatory Internet access. This will guarantee that new entrants have the opportunity to enter the market in competition with incumbent providers. Without access to the public airwaves, wireless innovators can’t enter the marketplace. And without restrictions against doing so, the strategy of companies like AT&T, Verizon, and Comcast will be to buy the administrative rights of our airwaves at auction, and then use those rights to block competition. They will likely stifle the development of new wireless devices by only letting their own endorsed products work on their networks.

It would be a big mistake to hand over these airwaves to the very same phone and cable companies that dominate the wireline market. We need more competition and innovation, not more of the same. This new wireless spectrum must be open and neutral so that America can build a better Internet for everyone.

In addition, wireless Internet service providers shouldn’t be able to tell their customers which websites they can access—just as phone companies can’t tell customers what phones can be plugged into a wall jack, cell and wireless companies should not be able to dictate which phones or wireless devices people use on their networks.

The public airwaves should be used for the public good. The FCC should protect the public good by setting auction rules that prohibit anti-competitive behavior. The government must protect our airwaves from corporations that would suppress innovation and competition in the wireless Internet market.

Thank you for allowing me to submit my views. Please do NOT add my name to your mailing list. I will learn about future developments on this issue from other sources.

Dear FCC Members,
Please create guidelines for use of the public airwaves which would allow inexpensive, high speed internet access to rural homes like mine which currently only have dial-up available through their local phone companies. It is neither user-friendly nor inexpensive.

A free internet is an unalienable right. DO NOT sell air space to corporations whose only impetus is money and control. YOU, the FCC, are supposed to be representing free America. WHAT are you thinking, selling the rights of Americans to corporations? Is this the fourth Reich? ARE YOU being paid by these corporations to sell out America? America is against the air waves being owned by corporations, and YOU SHOULD BE TOO!

For many years the rights of people in this country have been stripped by large cooperations who only get richer by stepping on us little people. Well us little people see the huge advantage of our freedom to educate ourselves our children about what is going on in the world that big business organizations that control the media are NOT reporting. A perfect example is reporting the ugliness of this war in Iraq. Of course is was fine to show the hanging of their corrupt leader. That was pretty gross. What wasn't showed was role of our own government played in providiing this dictator with all the weapons he used in committing these murders. The internet will inform the world of what is happening in our country, not the media. We need the internet. Our schools need the internet. I use the internet to help people all the time. Heck. Let’s just give the corporations the interstate highway systems, and all of the air space over our homes while we are at it. Is this really the world we want to live in, or rather want for our children. Corporations do not have the ability to innovate without constraints. I think a level playing field in the form of open airwaves is a good restraint for the companies that want

The airwaves belong to the PUBLIC!

Again, Don't let any company monopolize the airwaves - Keep America FREE!

Do not sell America to big business, please act like the objective public agency you SHOULD be.

keep the airways affordable and public!

Please protect our public resources from commercial exploitation, and let the First Amendment flourish. Enough profit for the big guys – how about some opportunities for the little guys?

I have no reason to believe that have the public good at heart. They are only concerned with lining stockholder pockers.

PLEASE do not become the FAULTY Communications Commision by giving in once again to big corporate interests that DO NOT have the over-all public good as their mandate. As an organ of the government it is your priviledge and your duty to do the right thing and truly serve the true needs of the many not the (greedy few), I trust that you will act in a courageous and moral way with respect the issue of the the wireless internet market. Without access to the public airwaves, wireless innovators can't enter the marketplace. So the strategy of companies like AT&T, Verizon, and Comcast is to buy the administrative rights of our airwaves at auction and then use those rights to block competition. They also stifle the development of new wireless devices by only letting their own endorsed products work on their networks. I am urging the FCC to protect the public good by setting auction rules that prohibit this anti-competitive behavior.

Please do not turn these airwaves over to corporate hands. This country is in danger of losing it's leading place in science, technology and education. Such a sale is a sure way to hasten our decline. Other countries are way ahead of us in terms of getting access to their people. I believe that one reason is that corporate providers have no great interest in getting access to as many people as possible, just in building up profits.

TOO much wasteland on radio & some TV now with Uninformed or misinforming political or sales pitch propaganda "talk", show hosts” trying hard, uselessly, to me to follow the balanced, “fair”, rule, their backers promoted. Thank God, (as they like to say) Public interest tv programs are continuing to present, up to the moment, deeply human oriented call in programs in particular aspects of our daily lives, calling on well accepted, trained dedicated and support ive persons who discuss their viewpoint, (civily), with the host & the callers from various walks of our daily life: civil servants & community workers, artists, writers and actors. Half of the days Fm programs are devoted to a variety of fm music from many places. Tho’ I am a community activist, & do not have to go to an 8-5 or 6-7, it is a joy to me to wake up or go to bed with such good music. It seems that, beside public support more foundations and business are supporting these Programs. PBS is currently my, must see programming on tv. Public support is growing and its’ best aspect that encourages this in 9-5ers is the wweekend or late night programs reprog- rams, home education oppurtunity. As a special education teacher, formerly many years, retired that pleases & informs me. please Don’t give away these many years of valuable &improving programming to more sales-men or Govt. baser ideas. thanks for supporting Public interests. I have read and understand what is at hand. To me, this decision comes down to an opportunity. An opportunity for the FCC to allow for a more public use of the internet, without allowing companies to get in the way. Where would we be if people had to pay for access to radio? Or public television? The internet is a great opportunity for ANYONE to have access to information and to bring innovation to the forefront of our society once again. I urge you to make the internet as publicly and widely used as you have the power to do.

The airwaves represent both a source of great democratic potential for the people of the United States, as well as a revenue stream for our society. The distribution must be fair, and must address the essential needs of our citizens to communicate and be educated, before the Lion's Share is fed to these Near Monopolies that have been driving the content into a corner and whitting down our perspectives, our choices, our peoples' literacy and civic awareness.

I am the IT manager for a small company, I am entrenched in the tech industry and have seen the limitations large companies place on innovation and control. I consistently get worse service and worse communication from every large company I work with than the small, lightweight, innovative companies that really make a difference to our company. This is especially true in the Internet access domain. Please do not bow down to the corporate lobbyists who will make you believe everything good comes through them. The United States lags far behind other industrialized countries in terms of Internet access and speed because of complacent and slow-moving behemoths like AT&T, Verizon, Time Warner and Comcast. I ask that you let a true free marketplace determine who offers the services and how they are to be offered, rather than allowing a small group of large companies to offer the same basic packages across the country.

I know there’s a push to HDTV so that regular TV station channels can be sold for other purposes. However, what are citizens getting in return? Many people still don’t have HDTV ready TV sets and the costs are prohibitive to upgrade current sets, which requires buying new ones. With the public air waves free, there was at least some legal rights for the public to time shift TV they watched, but if TV signals become completely private from companies like cable, our rights to do what we will with what we watch lessen. New technologies are supposed to be improving things, but I’m seeing lots of jumps to new technologies because it gives big companies an edge in competition, not because the product is truly better. Why give up public airwave to jump to a new technology like HDTV which won’t even work in many homes without cable anyway? People are still receiving TV through non-cable and non-satellite sources. There hasn’t been a good replacement for these sources put into place. Cable and satellite are more restrictive and more expensive to the consumer. Please don’t turn the people’s airwaves over to big business. They have been taking away so many rights as it is, such as our rights to know what’s in the food we’re eating. Try calling any company in the food industry and asking them if certain ingredients appear in their products. All they’ll tell you is to buy someone else’s products if necessary, but they will not tell you what ingredients make up their products. The amount of food allergies in the US are growing yearly, yet the food industry will not let the people know what they’re doing with the supply. If you hand the airwaves over to big business, the people will have lost something they can’t get back and I don’t believe big business can be counted on to be good custodians of our interests. Just look at how many decent educational shows when a station isn’t required by law to air them? Do you see that many decent educational shows when a station isn’t required by law to air them? I can see what’s happening in Venezuela!

Please protect the air waves for public use and enrichment. There are fundamental differences between public and private broadcasting, and as taxpayers we have a right to have public airwaves preserved for the common good.

As we rely more and more on our computers and handheld devices, having access to information no matter where is becoming more and more necessary. Right now we are caught between the two worlds. If we are really going to move forward into the information age, then we need access to information 24/7 wherever we are. You have the opportunity to make this happen in this our country. Verizon is an arrogant, uncaring, lousy customer service organization. Why give them even more stuff to louse up then sell to the US public?

The public deserves better, keep the internet out of corporation control.

Large media and telecommunications companies have been given far too much control already. The big radio mergers destroyed local radio to the point that it developed a whole new industry (satellite radio) to replace the choice demolished in the merger. The government's role should be to restrict and limit large companies, not to give them carte blanche.
The internet is the most democratic tool in the history of the world—it should be accessible for everyone, and very inexpensive or free. Then it can have a powerful impact on world peace.

The potential to create nationwide wireless broadband internet coverage will arise very soon. It will require government involvement and it will require frequencies to be available to the people rather than monopolized by a handful of corporations. The future of wireless internet will revolutionize the way we think of broadcast media and will democratize the internet and information access. This cannot happen if corporations like AT&T, Verizon, and Comcast control the airwaves. Please do not allow these companies to stifle competition and to prevent the information revolution that will fuel our economy into the future.

It is my understanding that access to publicly owned and regulated airwaves is a liberty inherent to every legal citizen in this country. In other words, public airwaves are held in the ”commonweal” of this nation. Therefore, no entity, person or institution has the ability to deed or sell the airwaves to any other entity, person or institution. Should that occur, it would be the same as my selling YOUR car to someone and pocketing the proceeds, or using YOUR property as collateral on my loan. Ridiculous!

We want to have full use of the internet without monopolies and without the controls of big corporate partisan dynasties. Keep the internet free from this loss of oxygen.

Another example of government doing anything it can to pander to big business without a concern for the effects on the average citizen. This is a bad idea.

"The public airwaves should be used for the public good. The government must protect our airwaves from corporate gatekeepers who would stifle innovation and competition in the wireless Internet market."

These our airwaves not the governments and we, the people, want net neutrality.

To whom it may concern:

Please don't allow large corporate interests to purchase public airways that they could not possibly use. Anticompetative behavior by companies seeking to stop advances that will help low income families have access to information is not in the best interest of the public.

The public airwaves need to be used for the public good, NOT to perpetuate a monopoly of access and information, or to keep prices of these services astronomically high. Some selling off our national assets to the highest (richest) bidder. It’s a shame our government officials can’t escape the grip of big corporate interests. Some day hopefully there will be principled officials that will actually protect the interests of WE THE PEOPLE, not WE THE CORPORATIONS.

Please insure that those purchasing the airwaves that you are auctioning must keep them as open as possible, i.e., that they must allow their wireless Internet customers to access all websites and not restrict them or shape access to them as they apparently do now. And just as phone companies can’t tell customers what phones can be plugged into a wall jack, please require that cell and wireless companies not be able to dictate which phones or wireless devices people use on their networks.

Thank you.

Dear FCC,

Please, please(!) stop the current trend of deregulation that has happened over the past few years. Allowing giant conglomerate corporations to own more media outlets has negatively affected our country - namely by allowing group-think to pull us into an unwinnable war. The media has done nothing to stand up and do its duty against the Bush administration, largely because these large corporations are benefitting from the Bushies and its policies. There is no alternative voice because the news has been homogenized. TV stations have become a mouthpiece for the president, the vice-president and their agendas. The same goes for music on the radio. One can travel to almost any major city in the country and hear the exact same format, possibly even the same station name, and to be honest radio sucks. I do not even listen to music on the radio because first of all, it is awful, but also because it has become the trend to play music only from artists representing large, wealthy, influential record companies, and only large, wealthy, influential record companies. The real talent does not make the airwaves, and while a radio station is obviously a business, music is an art form, and there is little art in the music that is on the air in the 21st century. The people of the U.S. need an impartial, un-lobbied media, whether it be TV or radio and it starts with regulation. No owner/company should be able to own more than a very small number of stations. Things are out of control with this but you, the FCC, can do something about it and look out for the interests of the American public, not Michael Powell, George Bush, Dick Cheney, and the Republican party. Please do the right thing.

Dear FCC,

While I realize that big companies have lots of money with which they COULD use these bandwidths of the electromagnetic spectrum to revolutionize the way Americans live their daily lives, I am convinced that they are profit motivated (as any corporation is) which is non specific to the goals of advancing the technologies of free communication. In fact, I’m sure that the modern business models demand that the progress be slowly and deliberatively parcelled out over a longer period. I want the public airwaves to remain under the control of private citizenry, in that of the progress be subject to the whims of those serching for and inventing more excellent ways of communicating. This is imperative for the continued liberation of our society (and ultimately the world) from the shackles of our collectively held failure at communicating in lieu of violent and maximalistic methods of social reform. While I do not believe this issue alone to be the keystone of our freedom to talk to one another, it is incumbent upon the leaders of today to create (or ALLOW) infrastructure that can be used toward these more ideologically motivated ends. With this in mind, I ask that you PLEASE do not put another vestal valley of our etherial domain up for unlimited corporate grazing. Thank you for your time,

The auctioning off of these available public airwaves is disgraceful. These airwaves belong to the public and should only be used to serve the public benefit, not that of purely commercial interests who will use them to restrict public access and price access they deem appropriate, out of all proportion to their cost, all at the public expense. This obscene profit taking by the so-called communicationsenterprises at the cost of open public access is criminal and unconscionable. It's WAY past time to reign these profit pigs in and require that these airwaves be opened to public use at the lowest possible cost as regulated by a governmental agency whose membership is restricted to people who have NEVER worked in a commercial communications industry, or one related to it in any way. These restrictions must include annually escalating criminal penalties for all responsible corporate executives, that are triggered automatically (with no appeal) after 6 months of failure to apply corrective action.

The cupboard is more and more bare with each successive sell-out of public property to robber barons. How about not assuming that the profit-motive for Comcast et al. will adequately encourage the provision of a cost-effective service (it may, or likely may NOT). My experience with AT&T proves to me they are a company with no interest in their customers, only rebuilding an empire that can overcharge for any service they are allowed to operate. Comcast, perhaps because of being a newer business, has shown me it is similarly unwilling to bend toward customer expectations and overcharges like any monopoly (as they are in most locales in which they operate). Don't give away public airwaves, especially not to companies already proven not to be good stewards of the public's resources. If they are to be given away, give them only to non-monopolistic enterprises who believe greed is demanded at all costs. If the huge, established monopolies for some reason must be the recipients, make them pay their fair share for these valuable resources. This is a capitalistic society, after all. No one who votes to give away public resources to these greedy monopolistic companies like the "new" AT&T, Comcast, Verizon, etc., will never get my vote on election day.

IT IS CRYSTAL CLEAR that our present pathetic excuse for a government – the mere handmaiden of Un-American, Prosperity-Gobbling Monster Corporations which have overwhelmingly twisted and abused the undeserved good fortune bestowed on them in "County of Santa Clara v. Southern Pacific Railroad" (1886) – must STOP handing over all our resources to these unworthy, insatiable, would-be self-foudering PIGS. To be frank, it is CLEAR that the present Administration, more than at any time in our history – more even than in the Gilded Age of William McKinley – is outrageously beholden to, and as with virtually all else will gladly lavish the entire range of unexploited airwaves on, the same anti-Progress, fat and lazy corporate gatekeepers that have stifled innovation and competition in Internet markets for a decade. THIS IS NOT FREE-MARKET CAPITALISM, it is abject cronyism and Corporate Welfare; and despite the heavy complacency pervading so much of what passes today for public discourse, THE REAL OWNERS OF THIS NATION – THE PEOPLE, WHOM SO MANY OF YOU ARE TOO CYNICAL TO TAKE SERIOUSLY – WILL ONLY STAND FOR _SO_ MUCH_ BEFORE WE SURPRISE YOU WITH A BACKLASH THE LIKES OF WHICH HAS NEVER YET BEEN SEEN IN AMERICA.

To restore America’s leadership in high speed Internet services, AND AS A PRELIMINARY, TOKEN STEP TOWARD AVERTING WHOLESALE DISASTER FOR THE PARASITIC UPPER ECONOMIC ECHELONS OF THIS COUNTRY, the FCC must ensure that the upcoming AUCTION set aside at least FIFTY (50) MHz of spectrum for open and non-discriminatory Internet access. This will guarantee that new entrants have the opportunity to enter the market in competition with the glutted, hyper-saturated incumbent providers with their false sense of entitlement. A SHOCKING DAY OF RECKONING IS COMING FOR THOSE SELF-IMAGINED "POWERS THAT BE," WHICH FAIL TO HEED INCREASING WARNINGS SUCH AS THIS ONE, IF YOU DO NOT TURN FROM YOUR TREACHEROUS WAYS AND START TAKING THE COMMON PEOPLE SERIOUSLY. Many of you seem determined to push the already over-extended Envelope on nearly every front imaginable, to the point of These telecommunications companies are far too powerful and contribute to America’s corporate totalitarianism. Save our democracy and protect the lines of free communication and speech.

Here's your opportunity to send an unusual message to the American people, that the federal govt hasn't totally become the enemy of the public and its well-being. Your choice is: wire? or go haywire. Meaning that increasingly, the perception of the American people is that its government has lost its mind, its heart and its soul. Perhaps this could be the first little sign that you are considering once again doing what's best and right for the people you represent.

With all of my use of the Internet at various levels, I depend on its freedom and the ability to function in a free environment. With the increasing consolidation of the media by fewer and fewer corporate hands, I fear I will lose much of this freedom.

I can’t believe what I read. Americans once knew better than to let the corporations – what Dwight Eisenhower called the “military-industrial complex” to run our country. To ruin our country, I should have said. The Internet belongs to us; to us who are the people –not to those whose purpose – whose raison d’etre – is simply to take in more and more money. Dear Commissioners,

As a private business owner since 1983, I nonetheless remain a supporter of public radio and TV. The two are NOT mutually exclusive. Any attempt to restrict the purview of public communications would be an affront to the American people, and to Thomas Jefferson, for my two cents worth.

Hands off, Sons-Of-Bitches
By Armando Gomez
May 29, 2007

Apparently, the federal government is trying to turn over a huge chunk of our public airwaves to corporate monsters like AT&T, Verizon, and Comcast who will use them for huge gains at the expense of the public good. These airwaves are an once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to revolutionize Internet access at more affordable prices than current Internet service. The greedy phone and cable companies don’t want this competition from the Internet service—they’d rather purchase the airwaves at auction and then use them against us, the public! In June, the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) will make a major decision: Use the public airwaves for the public good, or turn them over to big companies who will stifle competition, innovation, and the wireless Internet revolution. Since the Bush administration is running the FCC we all know where all this is heading at. Well, here’s my lip: The public airwaves should be used for the public good. Period. The government’s job is to protect our airwaves from corporate raiders who would stop at nothing to control the entire mainstream news, thus controlling the public and public opinion. In short, to control public opinion is to control and protect corporate corruption at the expense of the public. That’s not you guys! What are the corrupt interests? Misleading information about the corporate corruption of the U.S. occupation in Iraq; the credit cards and bank system connections; the Medicare scandal; the corporate/pharmaceutical scam; the Bush & Cheney Big Oil connections in Iraq; the Alberto Gonzales fiasco; Condi Rice false information in the run-up to the Iraq war and the abuse and exploitation of our troops by the Bush administration. There’s much more but these are enough for now. In order for the general public to receive and obtain uncontaminated information about the above crimes against the nation we need the Internet free from corporate control. And that means Internet access at affordable prices and hands off by the greedy sons-of-bitches phone and cable companies.

This FCC has been the most Pro-corporation commission in the history of the FCC. BellSouth, Cingular and At&t should never have been allowed to monopolize the communications market again. People worked hard in the 1980’s to break that giant monopoly apart. Keep the airwaves free from corporate control.

Is there any way you can expect me to believe the FCC is not colluding with major corporations to keep our airways free and competitive? I don’t think it is in any ordinary American citizen’s best interest for AT&T, Comcast or Horizon to own these newly allocated airways. Corporations are beholden to stockholders first, customers last. The cost of living just keeps rising and rising, competition keeps getting swallowed up by larger and larger conglomerates and the only ones who benefit are the top executives of said conglomerates and their business cronies. May I politely remind you that every person employed by the FCC works for me, the average citizen. If you deliver these licenses solely to the big corporations I lose. Please don’t. Do you duty and serve all of your fellow Americans by refusing to let the big companies own the airwaves.

It is not in the interest of the American public to allow a cabal of network "owners" to control the release of information the public needs to make political decisions. The airwaves belong to the people of the United States and should be controlled by the people through our Congress. It is wrong to "sell" those rights away to private sources especially without regulatory controls.

Albert L. Ien

When the airways are turned over to big corporations information is less likely to be non biased. News can be manipulated for the benefit of the corporation or political party involved. I fear that the public will be again squeezed economically for the gain of the big corporation.

I object to large companies like AT & T, Verizon, Comcast, etc. controlling any more of the high speed wireless internet industry they already do. This industry should be left wide open for any and all newcomers to compete and offer new technology and let the consumer decide who succeeds. The FCC needs to keep their hands off. I have tripled my number of employees since the advent of search engines. Please keep the internet as open to competitors, large and small, as you possibly can.

There’s a famous saying: "Information wants to be free. Information also wants to be very expensive." This paradox is at the heart of the decision before you right now. You have the power to advance the entrepreneurial spirit of America in countless ways, to make access to education and information nearly universal. Americans applaud initiatives worldwide that give free high-speed wireless access to poor people— in Africa, in Bangladesh and elsewhere. Must we be destitute in order to receive this kind of service? Who shall benefit from information’s desire to be expensive? Why not let it be all of us? Do something right for your constituents and vote to keep the airwaves public and free.

The development of the internet demonstrates that more innovation is achieved through open access than through control. Google, YouTube, MySpace and Facebook are good examples. Don’t give or sell these new frequency channels to any public or private companies. There are too many radio frequency signals in the atmosphere causing unknown damage to humans and other life forms on this planet, bees for example. Radiation makes people sick in some proportion to the amount of signal power in the atmosphere. Remove radio frequency content don’t add more.

Best wishes for the continued survival for as many life forms as possible on this planet.

I am among the people who live in a rural area and don't have access to DSL. We get cable modem, but not at the signal strength that people in urban areas do. Yet we pay the same rate. Greed is behind all of this stifling of innovation. Everytime I hear of a new way to get good, high-speed internet access to rural areas, my hopes end up dashed because of the big phone and cable companies refusing to share their lines, or refusing to make low cost internet deals with small communities. This is nothing but greed. Innovation and advancement of new technologies are being stifled by monopoly companies. It's funny, because I thought the FCC had the power to overrule business, when harm is being done to the public. Instead the FCC has become a "partner in crime" to big business.

John Sensenstein
Delavan, WI 53115

Dear FCC:

Understand these basics! The airwaves belong to us Americans - who pay the taxes that authorize your agency. Your job is to manage the radio spectrum ”in the public interest.” That concept goes back to the Communications Act of 1912. That concept has not changed. Unfortunately, the FCC has become the pawn of large telecoms such as AT&T, Verizon et al. These giants have one intent - to own all the spectrum and stifle competition.

You are not requested, you are demanded to make new wireless frequencies available to independent providers, who will use them for the public good and things like equal access.

Reread that - it is not a request. It is a demand from the people you serve. We are the consumers and the taxpayers. NEVER FORGET THAT!!@!

Among all the connotative meanings of the word democracy is the idea of free speech. The air waves belong to everyone, not to corporations. And in our democracy we select representatives to preserve the public’s access to free speech. "Privatizing" every activity in life is a sure way to losing the single most important freedom upon which this nation was built.

Cherie Springer

I am categorically opposed to this measure. Privatizing these airwaves has the potential to stall or even kill progress towards a world that can take full advantage of all the wireless capabilities just beginning to emerge. This same mistake was made when we all got forced into using direct, rather than alternating, current. Even a slowdown of just 50 years has put us in a position now where we are desperately behind in many of the technologies just now beginning to emerge, because of that step. Please do not continue making the same mistakes for a few extra dollars, for a few millionaires.

By the public good, I mean what’s good for people who have no financial interest in airwaves or phone lines. Pardon my telling you your business, but my fear is that you see business as your business. People aren’t markets. Communication and information aren’t commodities—at least not until someone comes along who never learned what people are and who avoid conversations that that won’t make them money. What kind of competition do we really have when the option to get TV is either $50 cable or $50 satellite? There are no real option for people able to pay between 10-20 a month. We need new companies to serve these markets and offer affordable options than the duo/trio poly that currently exists.

I have considerable resentment at the choice of only a single broadband internet provider. DSL is not available in my area because it has grown too rapidly and the network doesn’t have the lines needed so heavily multiplexes, etc. Dial up I get only half the access speed we had in Denver because of inadequate land lines in our neighborhood. I have considered cell phone high speed but the cost by the minute is prohibitive for my family’s use. Likewise satellite broadband is not affordable both because of its high cost and especially the up front cost of the hardware capable of using it.

Because of the cost of laying lines and the heavy usage of wires in my neighborhood, my cable carrier has no meaningful competition for broadband. At what comcast charges, over $50 a month, the service is financially impractical for those households making less than about $30,000 a year. Many people now don’t even have dial-up access because they have switched to cell phones so they can be reached as they are forced by economics to move.

More competitive and readily available wireless services are the only hope for catching up with the many nations who now have greater internet and broadband participation than the United States.

Money gained by the Treasury from the sale or more appropriate lease of electromagnetic spectrum is inconsequential in the long run, compared to improving innovation and speedy internet access.

It is critical that the Commission members reflect on what is good for the general welfare of our nation as compared with corporate business entities in this case. Although there is a relationship of business enterprise and public well being, it is indirect where as open use of airwaves is a direct benefit that belongs to and potentially benefits all people as does sunshine, fresh air, clean water, the beauties of field, mountains, sea and sky.

You would be better off stopping this folly now. The gradual systematic theft of the public's airwaves will backfire in the end. Even the wealthiest individuals barricaded in their homes along with their minions, will feel the sorrow of the loss of freedom we all once enjoyed, the loss of community, trust, peace of mind. Freedom to communicate is essential for all of us. Don’t continue your journey on this fool’s errand.

In the recent past the FCC has sometimes supported corporate moves that have headed us in the wrong direction. The airwaves are a natural resource that belong to everyone and should be apportioned in the best interests of the American public, not just the best interests of a few large corporations. The FCC is responsible for keeping the airwaves free and accessible to all, favoring those users who best support the public interest. Do your job well!!

The United States has a golden opportunity to regain its place as a leader in the communications revolution, but only if the public airwaves remain public. The large phone and cable corporations want you to allow them to continue their failing monopolistic regime – that one that has given Americans the worst, most expensive communications service in the developed world. This time, let some fresh air and real competition into the arena – this time, vote for the interests of the American people, not the failed profiteers.

Hello! Anybody home? I give my money to Comcast and Verizon for services, because I do not have options for DSL or Cable in my area. They gouge my purse for the meager and very restrictive services they provide.

Please do not let them control the public airwaves! Let us have way to protect ourselves from these greedy giants who have great ideas about how to get even more of our money.

As a senior citizen, I remember allotting $15 a month for phone service. Now, without a cell phone, I have to allot over $50 just for basic cable (otherwise cannot get even local channels), and another $40 for local and long distance phone. Yes, I do have the luxury of DSL because I use SKYPE and instant message to talk to my daughter in Germany and Uncle in Portland Oregon and others near and dear. On a fixed income, these expenses are very difficult, but necessary for my happiness and peace of mind.

If they get more control of the "PUBLIC AIRWAYS", I can guarantee that within a short time, they will no longer be public.

Please me a public watch dog and protect us from this fiasco.

It is important to me and, I believe, to all our country that the public airways not be turned over to corporate control. Already the rest of the world is dismayed at how much of our "news" is so controlled and biased. We are supposed to be a free and open country. Exxon Mobil made the largest corporate profit in history while Chavez of Venezuela is giving poor Americans oil. Halliburton has stolen millions in Iraq while American soldiers died for the oil we plan to let American corporations control. When will our elected officials understand that what corporations want is what is good for them, not necessarily what is good for America! How can you possibly justify turning over publicly owned airwaves to private companies and allowing them to use them to restrict our access to information that should be freely available on the internet? This smacks of controlling the free flow of news, a principal on which this country was founded, and which has been a major factor in the continuing success of this country. Don't allow them to restrict the producers of content and thereby my access to news and information that I want to access. In granting them used of these frequencies, it should be for the public good as well as for their profit. Their being able to wring the last possible cent of profit from the process should not trump the requirement of their serving the public good.

Thank you for listening and considering my deep concerns.

The benefits of deregulation and competition shouldn’t exclude the rights of the public to the airwaves. Freedom of the press is being eroded by merger after merger. The public broadcasting systems and access to wireless networks are going to become ever more important protections of our democratic processes and traditions. Allowing consolidation of control in a few mega companies will not benefit ordinary consumers, low income families, or rural America. Thank you for your consideration of the public interest in your deliberations. Prohibiting cell phone companies from requiring consumers to change phone numbers every time they change providers was an important small step in the right direction. Keep standing up for consumers!!!

Please let the airwaves belong to everyone, not just the big phone companies.

Must corporations own everything? We're losing ground in this vital area because we don't have universal low cost access to the internet.

In a democracy the public good should be paramount...”for the people” as our Constitution reminds us.
Do not take any action that will restrict the air waves to competition - how can you possibility sell anything which should be open and free - is this threatened action one more move towards thought contrll by those who have the money?

We have already lost our use for the “public good” with the television and most radio airwaves to the greedy media companies which is outrageous. Do not let this happen again. The one thing that still keeps free flow of information and thought needs to be kept from the just for profit system.

Please don’t allow corporations to run everything.

Corporate interests are often out of step with the interests of the common good. Hopefully the people will prevail on this one over the profiteering of the few and greedy.

The public airwaves MUST be reserved to serve the PUBLIC not corporate entities so they can enrich themselves.

To the FCC:
Our democracy has always supported the idea of competition. If you allow this to happen you take away the freedom of others to compete with these corporations. This is just one more example of the ultra conservative republicans trying to take over this country. We are getting dangerously close to an invisible dictatorship by the corporations and the ultra conservative polical and religious organizations. "The American public would never vote for this if they understood the ramifications of these kinds of actions. You are there in part to protect American freedom so...please do your job.

The airwaves are a natural resource that must not be squandered by giving their control to a few corporations. I am not against corporations using portions of the spectrum, but they should not be allowed to monopolize them or control their use in the long term. Narrow bandwidths and limited licenses are one thing; wholesale private control of wide bandwidths is not acceptable. If the airwaves are made available for free public access to high-speed internet connection, we will be empowering individuals and small enterprises - which has always been the source of America’s greatness.

The US Postal Service, when it first delivered everywhere, brought us together as one people. Mass communication has always been important for everyone no matter whether we are well connected or not. So today, it’s the internet. We don’t need no stinkin’ gatekeepers as the guy in the White House would say IF he truly believed in freedom of people and not just the freedom of people with lots of wealth. There has been so much innovation since we've had internet neutrality. Maintain this very important resource as the equalizer it is. Don’t be afraid of Democracy. The gatekeepers cannot help themselves. They'll totally ruin it for the masses. Please let us, the living, breathing people, keep this wonderful resource.

With consolidation taking place in the telecomm, TV and Radio industries, one of the few places where individuals and small companies, can get the message out on an equal footing with the giants of the communications industry. If this bandwidth is turned over to the giants instead of held as a public trust (allowing public development of wireless internet infrastructure, like public utilities were developed in the 19th and 20th century.) Certain services (power, water, trash collection....) are so essential to modern life, that we deem them necessary to be paid for by, and available to all of us, rather than only those who can afford to pay whatever the market will bear for that service.

You’ve just become a real estate broker and congratulations for selling a piece of our collective soul. Go ahead, sell it to the highest bidder. Please do not allow major corporate companies an even greater strangehold over public communication. The only way to an open global community is to set up infrastructure to support this. The internet should be a public right, not a private privilege.

It’s a shame that corporations can be so readily heard and the general population of our proud, free country can be so easily ignored. If public airwaves are allowed to be sold, we’ll have only to hope for ”Radio Free America” piped in from Canada or Mexico.

This act would add to the evidence that the Bush Administration and the Republican party is pandering to big business at the expense of the citizens of this country. Please don't sell the airwaves to corporations - let some space be public - there must be some "commons" for us to all care for and benefit from!

Net neutrality. Don’t allow the captain of industry to gain control of a public network. Stop legislation that will curtail access for every user.

Please help keep the internet more accessible to the general public, as it is such a valuable resource that so many already have difficulty accessing. The big corporations have more than enough; give the rest of us a break.

Freedom of speech is NOT for sale!

Keep the corporations out of the public airwaves for good.

Free broadband for all, as they have in other countries, is best for the USA.
I am also outraged that my little internet provider cannot provide DSL in my town BECAUSE Verizon has a ‘transfer’ station (a little hut) here. What ever happened to competition. Oh, yes, Reagan through it out the window! Well, bring it back and enforce anti-trust laws again. I want competition - having only a handful of large corporations ‘running’ the economy is crazy.

Conservatives often argue that the free market is the best way of getting things done. If we are to be a respectable people, we must care for the common good, and to allow this fantastic opportunity to revolutionize Internet access by beaming high speed signals to many public places at more affordable prices, is the right thing to do. It would be quite wrong to take away this access for public good. To care about our citizens who are in poverty, and just barely have enough to eat and still keep housing and get by, is our duty. We demand that our public airwaves be used for the public good.

Dear FCC,
Since Harry Truman’s vision that the purpose of the wireless, the radio, was for the common good, the common good, has taken a back seat on the ever-moving communications bus. Communication obviously should allow for innovation and profit, but there is a limit and allowing 3 wireless companies to take command is beyond the limit and takes the vision of communications being for the public from the back of the bus to underneath its tires.

The greed, graft and corruption in this country consumes anything and anyone who’s not a high roller in terms of corporate power, entreprenureal power, or a mover and shaker in any of the other acquisitional markets that rock the planet, and rob the middle class and any other class of everything from homes to home entertainment. Now the FCC is joining those who are paying hefty, hefty sums to get them to vote their way or the highway. It's not and probably never has been government of the people, by the people and for the people, it's government by corporate design. Please protect the use of the public airwaves. Allocations of bandwidth should be based on the greater good—for the benefit of the public, not of corporate interests. Furthermore, that (lesser) portion to be used by the corporate world should return a fair market value in fees that are adjusted yearly to compensate for increased value of the space. This would correct the trend in the US to give sweetheart deals to business interests, robbing the taxpayers of just compensation for the use of their property while forcing them to pay for any expenses incurred in that use.

The FCC has an historic chance to make change for the good here: Poor and rural communities which phone and cable companies never bothered to wire with high-speed Internet access could now have high-speed Internet signals beamed directly into their homes. Blackberry and other handheld wireless users are currently blocked by phone companies from accessing Internet-based phone service and other innovative services.2 The FCC could stop these anti-competitive, anti-consumer practices by mandating wireless Net Neutrality.

I want Wireless Net Neutrality! Keep competition alive! Democracy depends on it!
Families would no longer be forced to choose solely between high-priced phone and cable Internet. A new wireless market including lots of competition within that market would mean more affordable Internet access for families. Poor and rural communities which phone and cable companies never bothered to wire with high-speed Internet access could now have high-speed Internet signals beamed directly into their homes.
Blackberry and other handheld wireless users are currently blocked by phone companies from accessing Internet-based phone service and other innovative services. The FCC could stop these anti-competitive, anti-consumer practices by mandating wireless Net Neutrality.
Socially responsible buyers could someday go to a store, scan the bar codes of products with an Internet-equipped cell phone, and find out which items are socially responsible. Phone companies can currently block such innovations from working with their devices (they often try to shake down innovators into giving them a massive cut of their profits) but the FCC can prohibit such practices on these newly available airwaves.
Technology consumers in America are currently denied all sorts of cutting-edge technology that people in other countries have like using Internet-equipped cell phones to buy products, transfer money, or give to charity. By opening the doors to competition and innovation, the FCC can change that.

The public airwaves should be used for the public good. This is a long-standing tradition that allows the largest number of people to have a voice and have access via the airwaves that are owned by the public. The government must protect our airwaves from corporate gatekeepers who would stifle innovation and competition in the wireless Internet market.

Why is this even being considered? Big brother coming soon????

Public airways should always be available to the public for the public good.
I want all Americans to be able to enjoy the same airwave benefits that many other countries take for granted. This just seems like a no-brainer issue for the FCC.

Please no more corporate give aways! TV has never realized its potential for the public good and instead has become a nightmare of constant ads and huckstering. What rules the airwaves is what sells the most "stuff." It could have been different and I’m still it may become different in the future. If the analogy of Ford being given rights to our highway has a shred of applicability to the decision about to be made here, it is the wrong decision. If memory serves me correctly at one point the networks were allowed to own only seven TV stations outright, and no media (re telcomm) company could hold a majority ownership in any given geographic area of the media outlets. I would expect no less in any future decisions.

If the analogy of Ford being given rights to our highway has a shred of applicability to the decision about to be made here, it is the wrong decision. If memory serves me correctly at one point the networks were allowed to own only seven TV stations outright, and no media (re telcomm) company could hold a majority ownership in any given geographic area of the media outlets. I would expect no less in any future decisions.

I am very concerned that there may be health consequences to using wireless technology. I think we should use the precautionary principal, and study the consequences. It is one thing if I choose to use a cell phone (which I don’t), but I think it is unethical to expose people without their choice or knowledge, particularly for children in school, etc.

This June it might be nice were WE, The People, to witness OUR 'Federal Communications Commission' (FCC) bite the bullet and finally 'allow' the PUBLIC the use of airwaves owned by the PUBLIC TRUST. These airwaves are owned by US but controlled and operated by big corporations! This is theft, pure and simple. 'For profit' business and, in particular, 'for profit' corporations must PAY to use our airwaves. Let the Internet revolution begin. Let justice commence this June!

As the proprietor of a wireless ISP, I find it disgusting that the government would even consider turning this valuable resource over to those whose only goal in life is monopolization. Our founding fathers saw a great deal of what was to come, and did much to try to protect us far into the future. Unfortunately, they were either blind or powerless to stop the biggest source of corruption their governmental project would face: the runaway train of capitalism, greed, and corporate superiority over the masses. I don’t know how it’s all going to end, but fear the dust-in-the-wind strategies of our ‘progressive’ leaders will have little or no effect. Good luck.

The internet has become the public forum. If corporate interests are able to control access to it, the forum becomes restricted. Because even the poorest of our citizens can usually go to a library to access the internet, it is the one source of unrestricted information necessary to have an informed electorate. I lived in Alameda CA for a while and the city operated an internet service as a public utility. Also several cities in this area are considering making wireless internet access free. I’m sure that corporate control of the internet would put a stop to this kind of development.

I believe the internet should be owned by the public and not by any corporations. The internet backbone was designed and setup through tax payer dollars. This has allowed it to be a revolutionary technology that changes as fast as users can design innovations. By allowing certain corporations to control this industry, it will lag and other countries will benefit. Please keep it an open technology and if necessary bring our tax dollars into use...It is worth it for the public and for Sillicon Valley.

We so enjoy our NPR and PBS stations, and feel that they are of great value to the community. We are isolated (over three hours of driving time to a large town), so we don’t have the options that many people do. We contribute towards those stations, but we know they can’t rely on us alone. Freeing up public airwaves in this manner is an unprecedented windfall. Our country has the unique opportunity to use these public airwaves to increase the knowledge available to the common man. The public airwaves were intended for the general public good. The FCC is again being manipulated by the private interests that are out to limit our democracy. We are inhibiting the public's right to get a wide view of issues and only those that represent the interests of the powerbrokers that are running this country. We are returning to the days of the Robber Barons. Now we have a new class of powerbrokers who wish to stifle competition for their own selfish gain. Wake up America before it's too late. The U.S. already lags behind several Asian countries in internet access. Economies of scale do not justify the narrowing of choice in portals of news and culture in the U.S. Open access to broadband networks enhance democratic decision-making. The opportunity to do the right thing once again exists for the FCC however it is a remote possibility that will happen.
Please, FCC, I invite you to Surprise the PUBLIC by NOT STEALING again from their present and future opportunities. The insistence of Big Business to use the internet for transacting most consumer driven needs makes it clear that EVERYONE should have ACCESS TO THE BANDWIDTH.
So many aspects of our DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC have been destroyed by the CORPORATE GREED MACHINE aka "personal individual wealth of a few". Former SBC front man ED WHITACKER is a perfect example of what I mean. Upon retirement he was given a $450,000.00 a MONTH PENSION, use of a corporate jet, lifetime medical and dental care. He may have more but I think you get the point. It is obscene that what is a lifeline for the people is to become a major revenue generator, churning hard earned dollars out of the average citizen so people like ED WHITACKER can have his $450,000.00 monthly cake.
By controlling the bandwidth, VERIZON or ATT will be able to forecast earnings well into the future to make sure it meets its CASH FLOW requirements.
Do you think the average citizen would have a problem if they knew what the sweetheart deals you on the commission are engaged in making? I think they would, and like the story of the EMPERORS NEW CLOTHES a brave person, like the little boy in the story, will come forward and say YOU ARE NAKED-YOUR GREED IS ALL THAT COVERS YOU!
Again I invite you on the FCC do the right thing and leave the BANDWIDTH FOR THE PEOPLE! Thank you for considering SUPPORTING THE PEOPLE.by the way you and your family are part of WE, THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA so protect it for those nearest and dearest to you.

To Whom It May Concern at the FCC:
Please act to make and keep our markets fair for all contenders, especially in the area of electronic communications, which will be increasingly influential over time. I ask that you do not sell or give title to new airwave frequencies to those companies who already hold influential market shares in this industry. Instead, make them available to the public, and new, fledgling competitors. This will benefit individuals and corporations alike, as well as showing wise leadership on your part.
Thank You.

Information from varied and independent sources is vital to the continuation of democracy in this country. I can’t think of anything more hostile to this notion than letting fewer and fewer giant companies become the arbiters of what information is dispensed to US citizens. Please see that the airwaves, which are supposed to belong to the public, do not become privatized and the property of the few for the few. Thank you.

The FCC should foster competition for the highest and best use of ALL broadcast channels, including Internet. The big corporations are lobbying to get control of the Internet to take money from the people. They want to squash competition and innovation if they can’t make a buck from us.

The government is supposed to insure competition and freedom. Giving away all rights to control the only Internet we will ever have—in perpetuity—would be a crime. Please choose carefully. Do the right thing and keep the Internet Free from corrupt corporations. If you give away this freedom, then you just might spark a revolution.

The federal government is on the verge of turning over a huge portion of our public airwaves to companies like AT&T, Verizon, and Comcast—who will use them for private enrichment instead of the public good. These newly available airwaves are a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to revolutionize Internet access – beaming high-speed signals to every park bench, coffee shop, workplace, and home in America at more affordable prices than current Internet service. Phone and cable companies don’t want this competition to their Internet service—they’d rather purchase the airwaves at auction and sit on them.

In June, the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) will make a major decision: Use the public airwaves for the public good, or turn them over to big companies who will stifle competition, innovation, and the wireless Internet revolution. We’re urging the FCC to mandate that whoever wins the auction cannot stifle competition and innovation.

The US is behind many nations in quality internet access at an affordable price. Verizon, AT&T and Comcast are the reason. It's that simple. Public airwaves for public good. If that isn't the mission statement of the FCC, it should be. It should be.

The idea that we would put a price on public airwaves at this point in our history is preposterous. We sit on the cusp of a new era which is characterized by greater and greater personal access to resources. As we move into the future, energy and communications must become a right under the control of the people. Do not make the decision to sell off this valuable public resource. It will only cause much headache later in our nation's life as the people must then wrest control of it.

I'm being gouged beyond belief. The large cable suppliers have the market cornered. I cannot use an alternative internet supplier, that is comparable in service because the city of Chicago is divided by the monopolies. There are no alternative forms of news being supplied by the giant corporations. Cable co.'s take, take, take and the consumer gives. The airwaves should be owned by the public. The age of disinformation is disseminated through the few channels that are owned by companies that want to retain the status quo. Change is necessary. Don't allow them to have free reign.

I am a rural resident who, after 5+ years, is still being refused broadband by my cherry-picking telco who is offering multi-megabyte access for less than $15/month just a few miles away. More open spectrum could easily be allocated so small companies can break the current deadlock by offering wireless connections other than short-range WiFi.

I’m deeply troubled by the prospect of public airwaves being owned or controlled by a very limited number of for-profit corporations. In particular, I expect that rural and small markets would continue to be under served, and local governments would be prevented from filling the gaps in their own communities needs. The internet makes available resources that every American may want or need access to, including medical information. Any move in the direction of greater restriction and control should be avoided. If anything, the FCC should act to ensure that availability of connections to the internet reaches as far and wide as possible, whether through public or private ventures.

My dream is for the entire world to be connected. Though we do not have the technology to process data at light speed, it is only a matter of time. You should know that fibre optics is the fastest, and resources should be spent on research and development. Information will be instantly received. Latency will be a word of the past. Fibre optics to every house would give them telephone, cable, and internet. You could even power the houses underground and run a powerline alongside. I still wonder why we kill trees so we can suspend our power and telephone cables, when. Create a grid, and plot the cables underground. Throw up the signs saying, "Call here before you dig", and just like that, tons of problems solved for the people. Affordable education, entertainment, and communication in EVERY household. Skip the wireless revolution! THE FUTURE WILL USE FIBRE OPTICS. WE HAVE FIBRE OPTICS. USE FIBRE OPTICS! It is only logical! Why allow big businesses to slow the inevitable?

I do not want the public airwaves managed by big corporations. The public interest is best served by maintaining the spirit of deregulation that started with the 1983 consent decree that broke up the old Bell System. The technical world is changing so fast that placing the usage of our airwaves in the hands of companies who are both physically and technically tied to the past is like subsidizing auto companies to change the future. Both the current physical plant and the current technical utilization of same should be written off and an entirely new plan be developed using dramatically different technologies. It is extremely unlikely that current providers will do that if you simply let them lock up control of the airwaves.

Please don't.

Complaining about gross mismanagement of public resources under the Bush administration seems a pointless task. The Republics have shown themselves to be even more incompetent and self absorbed than the Democrats. Regardless of the congressional example, i.e. lie, cheat, steal, prevaricate, murder and otherwise engage in all levels of malfeasance possible, I will once more add my voice to the growing thunder of disapprobation and ask you to quit selling out the country to your corporate buddies. How many houses, mistresses, fancy cars and golf outings do you really need?

Democracy depends on the freeflow of information without the interference from any government or group of organization. All those who use the public airwaves should have equal access to them.

The FCC could stop current anti-competitive, anti-consumer practices and mandate wireless net neutrality. This would be such an exciting development, with so many benefits for our future.

There would be high-speed internet access to poor and rural communities. A new wireless market would mean more affordable internet access for families. Americans are currently denied all sorts of cutting-edge technology that people in other countries have. The FCC could easily change that by simply protecting the public airwaves for the public good and not for the good of the growing monopolies.

Thank you for listening to the public.

The public pays corporations dearly for the use of airwaves through charges for cable access (tv, internet) and cell phones. The airwaves belong to the common and should be used for the common. Think about the well documented gouging by cable and cell phone companies. Remember when cable (for fee tv) promised "no commercials"? Corporations are unrelentingly greedy. Stand up for the consumer. Make it possible for more people to afford access.

Why must we fight the same battles over and over again with our own government???

We as Americans count on our government to protect our rights and freedoms. Not all can afford their phone bills every month let alone an internet connection. We need our government to protect the rights of all citizens, meaning the poor, disadvantaged, less fortunate and of lesser education. Corporate America needs to stand up and take account of its need to also do community service and make our world a better place for all. Not to just think of the bottom line. I would really like to see the true figures these large corporations in dollars really put into charity or back into their communities without it being a tax right off. Therefore that tax right off in turns comes right back out of the American Citizens pocket. So Revolution is a circle, so I say evolution would be the pattern/movement to follow!

I find it terribly ironic that the very corporations that spend millions of dollars to avoid paying the taxes that brought about the internet, now think they are somehow entitled to control something that they refused to invest in. The American tax payer built the internet and continues to pay for the maintenance and upgrades to the networks. So by the very definition of ownership these airwaves belong to the American people.

I can remember when the phone company saw that we were more connected rather than trying to restrict our connections. I lived in a small town that had very few phones. The phone company worked to extend coverage, not take it away. I remember "Ma Bell" fondly, so it is hard to speak out against AT&T, who I look at as their successor. Nevertheless, the airwaves are not theirs and they should not be given away to them.

The internet has been an economic engine, a generator of value, because it is decentralized and democratic. Its biggest successes: Google, Amazon, E-bay, did not exist before that bandwidth opened up. Do not strangle the Googles of the future by giving a head start advantage to bloated, outdated current companies.

The range of usable frequencies administered by the FCC is too small to allow any of it to be squandered on entrenched interests bent on protecting their current way of doing business. Sirs, we are the public you serve... not the corporations! We are those who deserve unfettered access FAR MORE than the megacorporations deserve to unfairly protect profits that are already far larger than they deserve, and at the expense of the public you are supposed to work for and represent.

I pray for the day that I find a senior governmental employee – and you’re ALL employees! – that isn’t beholden to those very few who already have more power, more control over our lives and, yes, money than is reasonable in what is supposed to be a democratic republic.

Do the right thing: Say no to giving away our airwaves.

Dear FCC,

please don’t allow the few giant telecom companies to monopolize and dictate internet access. This would stifle the free flow of exchanges that are now possible via the internet, inhibit the possibilities to learn, share and develop, and make the internet something of an elitist form of communication. Power in the hands of a few whose objective is financial gain is a danger we would do better to avoid.

Sincerely,

A great disservice has been done to the American people by allowing huge conglomerates and syndicates to control news outlets. Please, please protect our airwaves from corporations whose obvious goal is to make money without concern for our nation or our citizens. Personally, I'm feeling tremendously disenfranchised already.

Keeping the airwaves open has endless benefits. I have visited a number of communities with wireless access and this allows everyone access to this great benefit.

It is your duty to make sure the public airway are used for the good of the public!

FCC keeps changing the rules to benefit very large corporations to the detriment of consumers and the general public. Broadcast radio is now dominated by a few companies and we are losing creativity and access to information in the process. Satellite radio is going the same way. Not only should the FCC limit how much access any one company has, to encourage variety and competition; but the FCC should also prevent future consolidation, requiring companies that merge to give up some of their airwaves, and also require companies to give up any underutilized airwaves.

Dear FCC: Please decide in favor of progress and fairness by not handing over our precious airwaves to companies like AT&T. I just canceled my Long Distance service today, and discontinued my cell service earlier this year because this company is clueless to the needs of the average American consumer, no longer delivers service or even understands the meaning of the term customer service, and would rather outsource jobs to put long time faithful employees in our unemployment lines while granting incompetent administrators ridiculous salaries, perks and bonuses. Please do your job for the American consumers. Sincerely, Judith M. Graves

America has a rare opportunity to leapfrog the advanced network development that has occurred in countries such as South Korea by creating broad, public access spectrum for applications not even imagined. This will best be served by saving it as a public commons.

I don’t see how Congress could possibly allow these monopolies to get a hold of these rights - even if they don’t use them and hold onto them, they will pass the cost on to the users, who will pay dearly and gain nothing.

Dear Commissioners,

Public use of the airwaves requires public access to them. Keep the airwaves open by requiring extensive bandwidth devoted to free public access. Please manage the airwaves to provide access for actual citizens instead of allowing control by virtual corporate-citizens.

In these times it’s important for everyone to have access to high speed Internet, but not everyone can afford it. The new public airways should be used for the public good. If they are turned over to private companies, that will stifle any competition and allow the phone and cable companies to keep prices high, and out of reach for many people.

Our experience with cable-TV companies who had a monopoly when cable-TV was first introduced, has shown that once they gain full control, public service is no longer a high priority. The rop priority of businesses is to earn the most possible (c.f. current experience with oil companies). To maintain checks and balance on that force, ”net neutrality” must be in place, and defended, and companies who potentially benefit from control of airways, should pay a reasonable fee up front, and annually in the future; and they should submit to regulation and evaluation by public-service federal agencies that are truly administered for the public good.

The very need for a petition such as this should show how ludicrous the situation is becoming. Now we have to fight over airwaves?? Spirited competition and innovation are cornerstones of our economy, no? Therefore we cannot allow a stranglehold over these qualities. Common sense would seem to dictate that the corporations then NOT be allowed these rights.

We've seen for the past 6 years that the current administration has sold off many public resources or privatized many government services. The result has been mismanagement or worse. The status quo has been to privatize profits and socialize costs (except the very rich get tax cuts).

I am a small business owner. I do not support turning over public frequencies, or airwaves, to large telephone and other communications conglomerates. The competitiveness of my work requires low cost, ready, nationwide access to all of the internet. This requirement will only grow over time. Allowing the huge multinational or American communications companies to own our public airspace will simply create a nightmare where profit for a few is the goal, and where most of USA will pay far too high a price for broadband access. I can tell you that our local cable monopoly offers remarkably poor service because we are captive to them. I have had downed cable lines in my backyard for 6 months, since storms knocked out our power for a week, and the company refuses to fix them. This is just one example of the arrogance that accompanies too much power.

We need to increase competition, which is the American way, not diminish competition. Please don’t make the public airwaves like baseball, or we’ll see the equivalent of steroids scandals in the near future. The FCC must not allow control of public frequencies to fall into the hands of a few. If this does happen, one must wonder whether the FCC serves the public at all.

Living in a rural area access to wireless internet and cell phone service is already limited to us due to market forces. By selling off public airwaves to the highest bidder you are preventing some future entrepreneur from solving this dilemma that takes place across the country in rural areas. Please do not sell off public airwaves.

Access to information and the right to speak to others on issues is a founding principle of any democracy. I urge that you keep the airwaves in the hands of the public not in the restrictive grasp of a few corporations who will use it for profit not necessarily the public good. As a governmental agency I expect you to make decisions based on what will be the greatest good for the greatest number of people not just for the benefit of a few wealthy investors.

There seems little to debate: the PUBLIC airwaves are for the public. There is a notable lack of equality right now in education, health care, access to the political debate. We should all be striving for more equality, not more support for multinational corporations!

I don't believe it is absolutely necessary that everything be owned by somebody or some group. It used to be nice to turn on the radio and listen to good music, now that is getting hard to find. On top of that it seems that over the air radio maybe on its way out, like over the air TV is about to go. When will the public get a break from big business wanting to own and control everything?

These newly available airwaves are a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to revolutionize Internet access – beaming high-speed signals to every park bench, coffee shop, workplace, and home in America at more affordable prices than current Internet service. Phone and cable companies don’t want this competition to their Internet service—they’d rather purchase the airwaves at auction and sit on them.

FCC please protect the public good by setting auction rules that prohibit the telephone and cable companies from engaging in anti-competitive behavior. If the government auctioned off the right to maintain a public highway to Ford, we would certainly not let Ford block Toyotas from the roads. Likewise, big phone and cable should not be able to keep innovative companies off our airwaves simply because they have superior financial resources.

The airways must remain a public trust to insure freedom of the press. The only way to provide free access to information is in public ownership and a much stronger FCC.

Please act to see that these available frequencies are not ceded to the control of private interests, but are instead kept open to all. Please.

No company or corporation should have any say over what I can see on line.

This is one more example of how the Democrats and Republicans are really the same. How can this issue even be brought up, because our politicians are all bought and paid for. Real revolution means getting rid of both as really all they are after is wealth and power.

Please protect our airwaves. This is for the public to use not for the greed and benefit of few corporations.

I travel extensively and see the USA falling behind many other countries due to the lack of competition and the cost of communication technology. We need to promote solutions which allow for lower cost telcom and internet access especially for rural areas. A public investment in WiMax or similar technology including part of this spectrum would return economic gains to the country far beyond the one time gain from an auction.

An equal opportunity internet is so critical to young people today who are trying to test and exchange ideas and are trying to get exposure to further their careers in any form of the arts. To give more of our natural resources to these companies, who are already, essentially monopolies with no competition is outrageous theft perpetrated on the middle and working class. I know Bush doesn’t want anyone but the billionaires to have anything—but enough is enough.

An open wireless spectrum not owned by any one corporate entity would create a huge opportunity for communications innovation that would be squelched by companies like AT&T or Comcast in favor of the huge investment they’ve made in their proprietary communications systems. Selling off these frequencies would just perpetuate the horrid mess that is the current cell phone industry, with proprietary and mutually-incompatible interfaces, networks, protocols, available media, etc.

Laws passed in the early 20th century insured anti-trust and monopolies would not be able to form. Verizon, Comcast, and AT&T have been sued continuously for gouging costumers and using illegal tactics to prevent competition. The FCC has no right to entrust public property to companies that have more often than not betrayed the interests of the public. The FCC should be promoting competition for the average consumer and citizen, not putting our property in the hands of monopolies.

I once trusted the FCC to manage the limited resource known as broadcast airwaves for the public good. Coincidentally, that was back when I generally supported the Republican Party. But somewhere along the line, both the FCC and the Republican Party became blatantly anti-public good and pro-public company. I ask the FCC to return to its original mission to protect and manage the airwaves to the advantage of all Americans, not just the wealthiest few.

I have been a customer of all of these companies (A.T&T, verizon, etc. They are all terrible at customer service. I have been repeatedly charged for services I don't want or need. I used AT&T for home phone service, long distance, internet access and cell phone. I was overcharged for cell phone use. I called to complain and was told 3 different times that a representative would call me back. I am still waiting (2 years). I paid for my internet services and my home phone and long distance calling but I withheld the amount for the cell phone since it was in error and I had been waiting 3 months for a return call. I was told by AT&T to pay everything or all services would be cut off. I called again to try to get anyone to talk to me, no luck. AT&T cut off all my services even though they had been paid for everything except the erroneous cell phone billing. I had to pay the bogus charges plus other reconnect fees or do without even emergency phone services. I cancelled the cell phone and am still using AT&T for the home phone and internet service because there is a limited number of service providers. I hate AT&T but what choice do I have. Comcast, Verizon, and every other telecommunications provider play by the same rules. Keep the internet free and democratic. Anyone who votes to give these private companies more control over the internet should be DRIVEN out of office.

Corporations are not interested in the public well-being. Corporations are interested only in profit and will do nearly anything to protect their bottom line. Is that what you really want? Corporations have pretty much taken over our food supply and we all know about oil companies. The public has not been served in either case. Are you sure it is a good idea to hand communication over to them, too? How many times does one have to be fooled before one gets that corporations do not care about the general good?

Democracy depends upon accurate news information. The news media are all presently controlled by big business and special interests. The Iraq war is a result. I was aware of the lies and the liars, who were pushing for the Iraq war, and of the likely disastrous consequences on Iraq of this war just by following common sense and checking news in foreign countries. If you destroy free access to worldwide information on the internet, you will destroy this country as a democracy, and create an oligarchy controlled by dictators with the help of big business and special interests.

This is absolutely, positively one place you have got to keep private interests from invading more of what rightfully belongs to the people. THE AIRWAVES BELONG TO THE PEOPLE, NOT TO CORPORATE INTERESTS WHICH USE THE PUBLIC AIRWAVES FOR PROFIT AT THE PUBLIC'S WHIM, AND IT SHOULD NEVER BE THE OTHER WAY AROUND. Don’t screw around on this issue, and don’t compromise.

Open your eyes to the direct conflict of interests when private companies manage our freedom of speech!

Not everything available in this country should be held in commercial hands. Somethings should be allocated for the public good.

The public airwaves should and must be used for the public good. This is a unique opportunity to designate these new airwaves for public use—and it should not be carelessly thrown away and given to corporate entities.

Competition is good for the American consumer. Please don't allow companies like AT&T, Verizon, and Comcast to purchase the public airwaves at auction and use them for private gain instead of the public good. This will only block competition and stifle the development of new wireless devices by only letting their own endorsed products work on their networks. The American people need the FCC to protect the public good by setting auction rules that prohibit this anti-competitive behavior. I implore the FCC to act in the best interest of the public and prohibit such practices on these newly available airwaves. Thank you.

I received JUNK MAIL from persons who are putting this public stuff into the advertised STOCKS. It hurts that my friend put a very large amount into these STOCKS on a whim of the moment thinking it will make her rich quick. She did not even consider what it might do. Any pandering of government agencies or commissions to corporate entities is antithetical to democracy, fair trade and common sense. Such agencies are, by definition, instituted to serve the public good and any actions and/or regulations initiated by same are obligated by their very nature to uphold the best interests of the people, which include healthy competition (not monopoly); serving of the rights of the people to market value services; and basic common sense.

Please. Please. Please.

Please do not allow these corporate giants to gain ownership of Public Airwaves.

If you allow them to stifle competition through monopoly you can only expect to antagonize the public who must then pursue adjudication of monopolistic practices in the court system. This is bad for them, bad for the public, bad for innovation and competition and bad for the country. Please do not take us down this path. Sincerely,

The public good can only be protected by the public. You are the representatives of the public and, as such, you are responsible for protecting us. Big corporations do not protect the public good nor do they provide the best, most efficient and effective services. It is time that we put this myth to rest. Most corporations only do "good" when they are forced to do so. And that is the FCC's responsibility.

Private interests with the assistance of the government is slowly stifling the ability of its citizens to be able to hold onto one of the most basic of freedoms under the constitution - the right to free speech. How could the government consider giving FREE broadcast space to private companies who would then charge people for the right to express their opinions? The right to Free speech occurs not only through freedom of voice but also through freedom of access - any decision that prevents that basic liberty is an attack of the fundamental freedoms enshrined within the US Constitution and every elected representative should reject outright, ANY impediment to the ability of the peoples of the US to maintain their right to free speech.

We are a small software company with four full-time employees working in three different locations around Columbus. Much of our ”inter-office” correspondence is conducted over the internet. In addition, two of us are out of the US six months of every year, and for much of that six months the internet is our ONLY means of keeping in touch with our co-workers in Columbus. Most of our retail sales are made over the internet. And we make software updates and upgrades available to our users by download from our website.

In other words, a fast, efficient internet system is vital to the continued success of our business.

Big Media, from ClearChannel to Fox, have told us that giving them control would expand the variety and increase the quality of broadcast programming. In ALL CASES, just the opposite has occurred. Radio is a desolate sea of identical geezer rock programming and hate-talk radio, television a cheaply-produced mess of ”reality” shows – and you can forget about news. Real investigative reporting is relegated to a few newspapers. Don’t let this happen to the Internet, too! DON’T give away the newly-available broadcast spectrum to Big Media. Consider reserving part of this spectrum for government-provided, government-supported wireless Internet by communities and municipalities. Consider THE PUBLIC GOOD. Do NOT turn over the new spectrum to Big Media companies. Thank you for representing me on this issue. I’ll be watching to see what you decide.

As Americans we champion our freedom and most of all our freedom of expression and free speech, it is your duty to protect the Public Airways from Big Business and those that will take away any freedoms that all Americans have and deserve.

If Big Business has the chance to control the public air waves; they will control what we as Americans think. Media is a powerful tool that can be used for great good; however history shows that this tool can also be used for bad. Propaganda and the interest of big business is to its own gain; without concern to anyone other then its cause or share holders.

Americans are now already slaves to Big Business, caught in to its web of consumption and debt. Americans now have to work for the corporate gain and have lost much of there ability to create there own existence; being paid what they are told is fair keeping over 45 million Americans in poverty.

You have a choice, protect what you have been giving to protect or give into Big Business; I caution you to look deep in your sole and ask yourself is it your right to allow Big Business to control the public airways or is it your right to do all you can to keep them free, free as you are to make this choice.

It is for the betterment of all Americans to keep Big Business from controlling the Public Airways and everything that Americans think and more importantly know. Please protect the Public Airways and our freedom of information.

Airwaves should be used for public good and should remain part of the public domain. Selling-off airwaves for corporate gain is raiding the pockets of the citizens of this country. To sell these airwaves is against everything upon which this free and democratic society is based.

We absolutely don’t want AT&T, Verizon and Comcast have a monopoly on the Internet. We have to keep competition open for new and innovative companies that truly care what their customers want. Those big old crusty giants don’t care. We are forced to use AT&T for phone service and Internet access and we are unhappy with them. If we could choose another supplier we would. We want more affordable and better Internet access. A real market doesn’t exclude and stifle competition.

The "great equalizer" of our modern society is shifting from education to access to technology. Just as the government provides free school for it’s citizens (and others), so should it provide free, or at least affordable, and equal access to communication technology. Please prevent private corporations from dictating profit driven policy which restricts access by the public.

Gerald Hammer

Deregulation has already removed the "public interest, convenience and necessity" portion of broadcast license holders and all it has done is put money in the pockets of large corporations. Access to public airwaves is incredibly restricted through these broadcasters. Corporate ownership has proven extremely harmful to the free exchange of information via the PUBLIC broadcast airwaves.

We've seen first hand how allowing few companies own all the radio stations has turned out, and it stinks! No competition or variety and listeners have no input or say for any programming. I live in a market with one, count 'em, one locally owned radio station. Companies are in the business of making money, not keeping the public interest a priority. The true freedom of the internet is exactly what our forefathers would have been thrilled to see if they were alive today. It is truly the best possible thing to happen to democracy, not only for the United States but for the entire world and it would be a travesty to sign it away to a few corporations wishing to not only squeeze every single dollar out of the American citizen but also to control their thoughts, opinions, and fundamental rights to free speech.

Do the right thing. (Hint: Make the airwaves public).

The license free RF spectrum currently available in the US is extremely limited, with the bulk of it in the 5 GHz range which is unsuitable for many applications. A substantial portion of the prime VHF/UHF spectrum being made available from the cessation of analog television broadcasts should be made available for public use. Parts of this spectrum should be made available for unlicensed use like the ISM bands with reasonable power output limits.

The abysmal track record of privitizing public radio, then public TV should be an obvious and clear signal that privitizing public media does not work in favor of the public interest, ever. It shouldn’t even be up for debate at this point. To act otherwise is to act against the needs of a country struggling to maintaining a democratic standard, which requires open debate not available in privitized media.

To deliver our airwaves and internet traffic irrevocably and totally into the hands of a few already powerful for-profit corporations will be to cut off the greatest collaboration tools the world has ever seen. It will do nothing but limit exposure to content and interaction, and in doing so limit our abilities to create medical advances, spread cultural understanding, provide and receive emotional support, and drive true free enterprise. I have no idea what the FCC is being offered in return for this most egregious of mis justices, but whatever it is, it is not enough. You have in your hands the ability to quite literally shape the future. So my question to you is this: do you wish for a bright future to be limited to those with deep pockets, or does every American deserve the chance to live in that same sunlight?

Public airwaves for public good.
The airwaves should continue to be owned by the People, not corporations. The frequencies in question should be leased for use in increments of not more than 5 year terms.

the PUBLIC owns these airwaves. anyone seeking to use them for private gain should pay early and pay often and KEEP ON PAYING. Keep the public spectrum public and stop giving it away to the highest bidder (who tends to immediately clamp down and stop competition and raise prices - if you don’t believe us, look at cable TV - hel-lo? Local gas companies and phone companies are also a bad example to follow - keep it open and available to US, its owners. At minimum, put in 'timeouts' on the spectrum purchase - making it a LEASE instead of a purchase, to keep them at least attempting to be honest....!

I have been using the local public access airwaves to produce a math/science show to present math problem solving with scientific examples. This sort of thing is mostly seen in college physics classes, where it occurs in life way too late for inspiring kids. I am trying to reach a much younger age so that young kids will have another means of being inspired to get into the real technologies of the 21’s century, and not just pointing and clicking on a mouse. To the best of my knowledge, even PBS has done nothing like this to bring such a television show into the home in over 40 years. The Bill Nye Science Guy, formerly aired by PBS for a long time, in my opinion was a farce, with no worthy connection of math and science.

I also do work on political shows, addressing important issues that the major networks seem to ignore.

The public airwaves have been hijacked by networks and politicians to receive blatantly large payments for political advertisements – hundreds of millions in presidential races, for example. At the grassroots level, people know this is wrong, and causes distortions of network news. Most people don’t believe what goes over their own airwaves, and so far, local productions can produce more accurate, less politically biased television content.

The best quality TV shows that I have seen recently are those aired locally at Portland Community Media, the local public access facility.

<td>These channels should be kept available for use by the general public to allow innovation in wireless communications and media to be made possible. Without these channels, the public's access to wireless channels they can harness diminishes. Also, there is no good reason why private companies should have a monopoly on the airwaves. By not giving them a lock, it will force them to innovate to increase traffic carrying capacity on the bands they currently own and use. As a side effect, it will slow the transition from wireless to wireline and force them to innovate on mixed use of these technologies.</td>

To Whom it may concern,
Please do not "give" away the public airways to companies who already control most of what we see and hear. This giveaway will only increase their profits and therefore tighten their monopoly. Public airwaves should be used for the public good. The government should not stifle innovation and competition.

Let’s get this straight: the airwaves belong to the public. Already that principle has been violated to the point where private broadcasters vastly outnumber public ones, and with far bigger budgets. The public already hears enough of the corporate view and profit driven pabulum. Now I hear the government is taking us even further down this antidemocratic road. It’s an absolute outrage.

Leave the airwaves open to all people not exclusive to special interest crypto-fascist corporate monopolies determined to have total mind control over every aspect of society. When the internet was implemented it was used for purposes of education and information sharing. That was the purpose then, that ought to be the purpose now. However, when the corporate fascist see a pixel not adulterated with coarse commercialism, their heinous greed suggest to them that it should be filled with every form of mental material fornication. What part of free market place don't you understand? We want the internet and the airwaves to keep the intended philosophic mission that brought it into existence.

Norma Madison
Chicago, IL 60620

As it now possible for a corporation to provide phone service, television service, and act as an Internet service provider, competition in select areas has become nonexistent. As a renter in a high-rise building, my choices, and those of the other 600 hundred residents, are dictated based on infrastructure. The expansion of wireless technologies would give us all more options. On a more important note, the "digital divide" still remains a major obstacle for those who cannot afford Internet service. Using this technology, we have the opportunity to provide large scale Internet access to thousands of individuals free of charge in a way municipal Wi-Fi was not able to accomplish.

I fear that the system will be compromised if it is not left open and that attempts to control traffic will actually encourage malicious behavior. I base this notion on current attempts to control access, which to a large extent have been unsuccessful.

I urge to keep the airwaves open.

Frank Musick
Philadelphia, PA 19103

I strongly recommend keeping airwaves in the public domain.

I feel that past FCC concessions to cable and other communications companies clearly demonstrate that promises of public benefit are hollow. It is tempting to conclude that these promises are not even sincere when offered. It is time for the FCC to stop making concessions to for-profit companies and start acting fulling in the public interest.

Dear FCC:
This issue is of vital importance to me as an American minority. As a highly educated (and under-employed) African American male aged 45, I feel like the issues that affect me now and have shaped me as an American have largely been ignored by America’s mainstream (largely white-owned and controlled) media. Where are the voices and stories of Native Americans, Chinese Americans, Japanese Americans, Latin Americans? They aren’t being told and aren’t being sought after by mainstream media. Why is the current standard of beauty still in 2007 a slender blond woman with blue eyes? By now the stigma of White Supremacy should have been erased from the American psyche, but instead it is continually propagated!
Furthermore, I feel that the current media conglomerations has served to isolate Americans and not educate and enlighten them. There is only ONE paragon of virtue and that is PBS on non-cable TV. Please don’t allow the Internet to turn into another vast wasteland made mediocre by greedy, unprincipled, and dark-hearted dullards also known as Corporate leaders that seek to lord over our every moment of life and stifle thought in America. Profit is not paramount in America... to be Free we must have Art, Education, Debate, Understanding, and Empathy for one another or else we are doomed as a people.

The greatest threat to our democracy is this effort to control the airwaves/internet by corporate giants with a political agenda. I see this as an important first amendment issue. The passive act of freedom of speech is freedom to listen. The public airwaves need to remain public. This is no different from what Chavez is doing—propaganda and mind control. The people must control the airwaves.

To the FCC,

it is imperative that our public airwaves be used for what we want. We want the ability to better our lives by using what's available out there. We don't want large companies to buy these airwaves simply because they are the only ones that can afford to do so. By doing this, they keep others from enjoying something that is already free. Most of already are customers of Verizon, Comcast, AT&T must they control everything else too.

Sincerely,
Benjamin Rivera

"public good" and "government income derived from spectrum auction proceeds" are not the same thing, but rarely are they more emphatically and diametrically opposed than in the issue at hand.

People with little money and with views that may not be favorable to large corporations should have the right to have their speech heard by large audiences—or at least they should. If large corporations are allowed to privatize public airwaves, the whole nation will suffer, particularly the poor and middle classes. Public airwaves are necessary for transmitting a wide range of views to the public in order that the public can have a wide range of information to ground their personal and political decisions. Privatizing the airwaves would do a great disservice to the American people by actively diminishing our freedom of speech and of information.

The idea that a corporation can own any part of the airwaves is just ludicrous. I can't believe that in the United States of America we are even having this discussion. These airwaves belong to nobody in particular. You, the FCC regulates them and that is all. Keep the competition open.

Do not sell the public airwaves to telecom corporations. They do not have a decent record at all of handling the public trust. I believe wireless consumers deserve the same protections as traditional wired, cable and DSL consumers have. In particular I believe that the "carterfone" rules that protect consumer choice in the wired world should be extended to consumers of wireless bandwidth. And Wireless users should have the same freedom to access the content of their choice as do users of cable and DSL broadband data services (no "walled gardens").

Please do not promulgate regulations that maximize wireless provider revenues at the expense of consumer choice and technical innovation.

I agree wholeheartedly with the statement that this is a vital issue for the truly democratic operation of the new technologies which PROFOUNDLY shape and even partially constitute the reality of public discourse in this country right now. The public airwaves should be used for the public good. The government must protect our airwaves from corporate gatekeepers who would stifle innovation and competition in the wireless Internet market.

Seriously Folks, you are all intelligent people and you know EXACTLY the Real World ramifications this bill will have for the HUGE MAJORITY of Americans (all of whom are - ostensibly - ”Born Equal” eh?). Another way of putting this is that this legislation that is coming up before YOU can either foster and facilitate MORE democracy and true interchange of ideas and information OR CRITICALLY WORSEN the "free flow of ideas and dialogue", the "FREE MARKET" of information if you will and will further calcify and accelerate the DEEP and INCALCULABLY DAMAGING structural inequalities that daily make a cruel mockery of this country's CONSTITUTIONAL IDEALS. This is not an ABSTRACT issue as you may allow yourself to see it (or rather delude yourself). It equals either an incredibly wise and correct step forward OR Real Suffering for People in the Real World. We are critically concerned about this legislation and we will be both Organizing and Watching how you vote on it.

Yours Sincerely, Elias Welsh, Northern California

In recent years, the deregulation of media has resulted in less competition and the monopolization of information outlets. Turning public airwaves over to private interests further erodes the public’s access to the truth, which is critical for the maintenance of a free society. There is little doubt that the Republican/corporate/military hegemony has a separate agenda, which indeed has little to do with freedom in America.

Nancy Garver

The United States is falling fast down the list of best connected countries. It recently was noted to be 13th, well beyond European nations, Asian nations and even some South American nations. While they have been working furiously to build business class Internet infrastructure the US has been in fighting and allowing greedy large Telecoms to dictate our future - - - and it is not a prosperous one if they have their way.

As an IT Manager, I can tell you that having third world connection speeds is hurting U.S. corporations when it comes to competition in the World economy. We have seen over and over what happens when the rights to a limited resource are given to the few - - - the opposite of competition takes place - - - stagnation of innovation and price gouging take place.

The airwaves are and should remain in the ownership of the American people. Companies may use the airwaves as long as they demonstrate good citizenship. Too many large broadcast companies have demonstrated over the last years their willingness to unfairly defacto regulate their broadcast spectrums. There have been violations of the first Amendment numerous times. Congress does nothing, the courts do nothing. By giving the airwaves to the highest bidder you sell out the American people to the dismal possibility of never knowing truth - - - only knowing propaganda. Please do your job and protect the right of Americans to own the airwaves and demand accountability by those companies that are privileged to use them.

The public airwaves and internet are exactly that, public. That means that We, the People, own those airwaves and the internet by virtue of long standing, historic precedents. I do not want those airwaves and internet connections to be sold to any private entity, now or hereinafter formed for any use other than that of the common good of the People of The United States of America. Cable cost $14.95 & (dial up) internet $21 when we first signed on. We now pay just under $100 to Time Warner...taken over from Adelphia. And 4 companies before it...that all went UP in cost with each new buy-out. We can hardly afford it but with 2 college students how on earth could we go back to dial up? There's NO competition as it is. That's the problem.

When was the last time you saw a concert or went to the theater? Or attended a live sporting event? Or listened to a sermon in a church? How about your constituents? How often do THEY take part in these kinds of activities? As a member of the live event production industry I know it is quite often.

The one thing that all of these events have in common is a strong dependency on the use of wireless microphones to get the content to the crowd. Legislation currently under consideration (The Wireless Innovation Act of 2207 (S. 234) and The White Spaces Act of 2007 (S. 337)) threatens to seriously hinder the ability to depend on the reliability of wireless microphones under most circumstances by allowing unlicensed consumer devices to operate in the same bandwidth.

While live audio production could be perceived as a niche industry, it is important to consider who it really affects. It is not just large concerts, mega-events and TV broadcasts. This is the referee at the local high school football game. This is the pastor at the church. This is the university class, business conference, town hall meeting, or one of thousands of other events that happen every day all over the country.

I urge you to take a considered and measured approach to this issue and take all necessary steps to protect incumbent services, like wireless microphones, from all harmful interference. It is imperative that the FCC be allowed the time to craft and implement a policy that will allow for the use of this new class of consumer devices without disrupting the events that millions of people attend every year. At a minimum I would ask that the FCC identify and set-aside sufficient TV Band spectrum in which these new unlicensed devices would not be allowed to operate, that spectrum sensing be required on all unlicensed devices and that these new devices include the ability to sense a beacon transmitted from a wireless mic that will protect it from interference.

The airwaves are public property meant to be used with the interest of the public in mind. The ability to be able to hear a sermon, university professor, or concert performance trumps the desire of those who hope to sell a new class of gadgets to the public without regard to the viability of other important wireless products that have existed in this space for nearly 40 years.

Thank You,
David Strang

It’s essential that every cell phone, computer, and other internet device be able to connect to every other one, and that no single carrier gets in the way of this, either by establishing separate, proprietary, private networks that deny certain devices or persons, or by collecting tolls. The success of the internet has been due to this point-to-point model, and it’s essential that the FCC do everything it can to make sure future communications apply this successful model.

Once public becomes private, it never goes back public again. Prices will rise for services in an already monopolistic industry, and the airwaves will then become the property of the monopolies to "give" back to the "needy" leaving the middle in the cold, paying top dollar for everything, once prices rise. Innovation and technological evolution happens when people, organizations and governments promote the development and use of new technologies and new methods for using old technologies. Allowing major corporations to stifle technological growth by allotting them chunks of a finite resource so that they can sit on it and prevent others from using it in a competitive industry only promotes the financial gain of those large corporations in the short term. In the long term it means countries like Japan will push the envelope for longer periods of time than we do and will advance their technology further and further ahead of our own. Our government should not allow corporations to stifle our countries economic and technological growth in favor of fattening their pocketbooks. They are not adding to our countries overall success by doing this, and they are sucking up the resources someone else could use to develop our infrastructure. Fast communication and the ability to share research is the lifeblood of any scientific and technological advancement. Don't let these companies stifle our growth!

Let the cities decide how best to use the frequencies. Municipalities are overall highly flexible and deserve some frequencies to build their infrastructure. There are no tolls on city roads and yet they work. Perhaps cities can move the democracy forward with citizen access to effective free speech.

Corporate interests on the sequestering of resources is never in the public interest. Let the cities enter the free market by keeping regions independent.

Increasingly I am disgusted with the FCCs role in making money. All air waves except those designated for government use are public not a private gold mine for the Government. The fact that collages cannot get FM licenses anymore is revolting. Who else but those learning to be in the field should be able to access these bands. AM is not what most people use and suffering a AM license when all jobs will be working with FM is wrong. Now you are wanting to turn over more airwaves to corporate greed is although not shocking but wrong again.

The internet is critical for commerce and for our children's education. With fuel prices, pollution and traffic wireless internet should be easily available throughout of nation to help more people work from home. I am a Sprint Customer and I think they stink. I am deaf and they are charging me to make a call and receive a call. They knew when I signed up that I would have to use text and never mentioned it would cost me more. Then too I keep getting bills saying they didn't get my payment when it comes directly from the bank to them.

With precious little broadcasting in the public good ie non-commercial, to grant airspace to corporations for commercial use is unacceptable. Public broadcasting is already suffering the restraints of less support, limiting their offerings to much fewer programs in the PBS ”news” package and eliminating local programming just to break even. How about supporting the public broadcasting sector with available grant money and letting the for profit corporations fend for themselves. Politics don't enter into the equation, the right thing is all that matters, so do the right thing.
