

The government must protect our airwaves from the same corporate gatekeepers that have stifled innovation and competition in Internet markets.

Use the upcoming spectrum auction to connect more Americans to an open, neutral and accessible Internet.

As both a Master of Social Work and a low-income American trying to work his way up, I need the internet to understand what's going on in politics and for many aspects of my life and livelihood, as well as looking for jobs, etc. Many Americans will be left behind, our democratic principles and republic further fractured, and the gap between rich and poor widened without proper access. We should join growing and forward countries like India who know that education and information are essential for people's upward mobility and the future of their population.
