

Well.. It's not much of a headline, but hey.

Democracy- Control by the People. Frankly, I'm rather getting tired of all this crap, just because a few big companies decided 'we aren't making ENOUGH money, we need more.' Yeah, no.

Maybe it's not all that important, perhaps in the long run it really isn't. What I do is study, when I'm not aiding in interior reconstruction and remodeling for a living. Theology and politics, and the impact that they have on each other both in a literal sense and Biblical ones, are what I study. This may not have bearing on the entire country, but I can at least, through what I come to understand by studying various religious beliefs and methodologies, I can hopefully improve the lives of those I come into contact with.

What, pray tell, is to stop the larger corporation from censoring what I study? It's no small fact that people of all major religious bents enjoy censoring the study and understanding of others. This is not of course, to place blame on Christians, everyone is guilty- except perhaps the Buddhists. Given the tendencies of those in power to attempt dominance over what they 'feel'- which is rarely based in fact- is right and wrong, I cannot say that I trust the larger corporations not to tell me I can't study without the personal bias of those at the top interfering. I'm sorry to say that, really..