

Why I Stand for Net Neutrality

The Internet is a paradigmatic transformation in thought, primarily because of its diversity, its innate nature as an extension of each and every one of us who goes online.

Any empowering of corporate America over the Internet will result in the disenfranchising of the individual; any loss of diversity is a defeat for freedom of thought, expression, and knowledge. This proposed action is UN-AMERICAN, INHUMANE, and monopolistic; this violates our basic human and American principles.

Corporate control is all about greed and profit. It is certainly not about giving; it's all about taking and manipulation and homogenization. I will be damned if Mr. Bell or Mr. Cable is going to tell me how to think or control what I relate to on the Internet. I stand with all other concerned, intelligent Americans and by extension the world community who value their own freedom of thought, their individuality.
