

Preserve Net Neutrality

The Internet has evolved into an important facilitator of free speech and free commerce, two important American institutions. Preserving Net Neutrality is necessary for the Internet to continue fostering free speech and free commerce. Allowing a select few telecommunications corporations to have a nearly monopolistic control over access to the Internet is not in the interest of the American public. Eliminating Net Neutrality will allow these corporations to decide what ideas are allowed to be communicated on the Internet instead of the current free exchange of ideas that currently takes place online. Additionally, I work for a small business that relies on the Internet for marketing. The idea that the business I work for and others having to pay additional fees to allow their websites to appear on the Internet is a burden to small businesses while enriching large corporations.

The FCC must ensure that broadband providers do not block, interfere with or discriminate against any lawful Internet traffic based on its ownership, source or destination.
