

Allow artistic freedom to survive

Net Neutrality is essential to free speech, equal opportunity and economic innovation in America. Since the FCC removed this basic protection in 2005, the top executives of phone and cable companies have stated their intention to become the Internet's gatekeepers and to discriminate against Web sites that don't pay their added tolls.

This fundamental change would end the open Internet as we know it. It would damage my ability to connect with others, share information and participate in our 21st century democracy and economy. The FCC must ensure that broadband providers do not block, interfere with or discriminate against any lawful Internet traffic based on its ownership, source or destination.

Since the FCC has allowed the media to be controlled by large corporations the flow of artistic people has been all but stopped. I do not want to hear old music and new crap (which is all clear channel etal play. The internet is the only place I can new artist and alternative rock from the past and present. It is time for the FCC to stoop being bung boys of the corporations and start serving the public interest. According to the Communication Act of 1934 The airwaves belong to the people and are suppose to serve the public interest. The FCC should be prosecuted for there turning over the airways to the private corporation. I do not even listen to radio except Public Broadcasting. Keep the internet free and in the hands of the public not the corporations who have ruined our country.
