

The Internet Spreads Knowledge

Dear People at the FCC,

My name is Ben Major and I am a undergraduate student at Rutgers University. The internet, mostly through the noble and awesome Wikipedia, has been my gateway to knowledge. I work in a lab and need the internet to look at scientific papers and do research. If this tool is taken away, the loss of information could be crippling. The companies like Comcast or Verizon, or whoever the fifth column consists of, should be shown the door. Just because the Senators and Congressmen accept money left and right does not mean you need to. FCC keep America's internet free!
