

I support net neutrality

I've been noting of late all the advertisements on cable TV telling us that Net Neutrality is evil, will limit consumer choice, will cost more, etc. It is, of course, an outright lie. You, members of the FCC, know the real truth - that Net Neutrality will ensure a free and open Internet. Several big corporations - notably AT&T, Verizon and Comcast, hate Net Neutrality. They want an Internet with toll gates - only those who pay them will be able to send their content down the wires.

There is a real danger that if AT&T, Verizon and Comcast get their way, America will wind up with an Internet heavily censored as it is in China, Vietnam or Zimbabwe - an Internet suitable for a tin pot dictatorship. Are you, the FCC, really going to allow this, just to help a few corporations increase their profits?

America is always boasting about being a shining beacon of freedom and democracy. However, that image is becoming very tarnished lately, and the campaign against Net Neutrality is a perfect example of how our freedoms are slipping away. I live close to the Mexican border - it will be ironic indeed if I have to go south of the border in order to view a free, unrestricted Internet.

regards,
Robert Storey