

Maintain Net Neutrality. Make it permanent.

Internet tolls for access are harmful to the very model of economics that our nation supports. Applying such heavy restrictions on a market so closely tied to the very culture of its people is tantamount to social regulation not surprising in a "communist" country with a command economy and tamed public.

Considering that the people have had such freedoms for some time, to extinguish them now would cripple the networks and trends that have emerged with the rise of internet usage. It defeats the very purpose of the internet to have restrictions on its access - as it is meant to be an easy and more efficient way of finding, receiving, and sending information.

I support Net Neutrality, as the alternative is inefficient and detrimental to progress.
