

I support the merger of Sirius and XM. Considering the success of MP3 players (particularly the iPod), online radio, downloading songs, terrestrial radio, high-definition radio, etc., it seems ridiculous to limit the list of XM's competitors to one - Sirius.

Cars now come equipped with satellite radio, am/fm radio and MP3 connections. What more evidence do you need of competition? My decision to purchase an XM contract (and then let it lapse) was not based on a choice between XM and Sirius. It was based on the content of am/fm, feasibility of MP3s, and circumstances in which I'd be listening (daily commute).
