

TRUNG NGUYEN
10882 ALLEN DRIVE
GARDEN GROVE, CA 92840-3243

June 13, 2007

Marlene Dortch, Secretary
Office of the Secretary, FCC
Federal Communications Commission
445 12th Street, SW Room TW-B204
Washington, DC 20554

Dear Ms. Dortch,:

I writing to urge the FCC to allow SIRI and XMSR to merge. I think we will definitely get better programming variety of the combined companies and also better pricing. If both satellite companies become one, they won't have to bid outrageous prices against each other for the same talent (Howard Stern, Oprah, NFL, Baseball, NASCAR, etc....) The savings by the satellite company would then be passed on to our subscription prices. More variety for less the money...I definitely approve. I've been waiting to buy a new car and don't want to limit my car selection because of which satellite radio company (and thus which type of programming CONTENT) I am going to get. I don't want my new car choice to be affected by which model of satellite radio I am going to get. As for a monopoly, I don't even worry about it, because there are so many choices out there for music and video entertainment. I have an iPod to listen when I want specific downloaded content, I have internet radio when I am on my wireless laptop...and the way technology is going, I believe that there will be a wireless internet radio available widely soon. I am sure Microsoft will also want its plug in space in the car with its Zune player too. There is just too much competition for me to worry about them being a monopoly.

EFFICIENCY is the next obvious reason. I don't want my car or home to be cluttered with an XMSR or satellite radio model just because I want different programming content. I already have the iPod and all of its connection gadgets, creative mp3 player, my dvd players, game consoles, etc... too many gadgets trying to achieve the same process....entertainment. That's the problem I see as consumer if the companies are not allowed to merge. I also see satellite video as the next step for these too companies and I don't want to have to consider again which brand to buy based on which content is available from each company. What if I want radio and video content from both?... I don't want to have to limit my choices or subscribe to both companies just to get the selection I want. On terrestrial radio, we have freedom to switch channels if we don't like the content. On satellite radio now, if we don't like the content, we have to switch subscriptions or worse yet, cars just to get different content. Merging the companies will provide more freedom and flexibility for the consumer...NOT limit it. Let them merge.

Sincerely,

TRUNG NGUYEN