Dear FCC:

The merger makes sense for the industry and puts pressure on all entertainment media to improve their products and keep costs low. Sirius and XM don't compete with each other, they compete with traditional radio and TV media. Please do not let this technology die -- let it develop so we can offer other options to choose from -- not only radio, but possibly television and the internet -- at our fingertips in the car, home, etc.

The quality of service Sirius provides is excellent and I can only see it getting better, not worse, as the combined, financially viable company takes on traditional radio and other entertainment media. There are hundreds of millions of potential subscribers that still need to sign up. The merger won't impact the combined company's main goal -- to keep costs down and the quality of service up so people subscribe.

Sincerely,

Martin T. Booher
