

I think that ISP's should be allowed to prioritize traffic to improve network response, such as giving VOIP packets priority over file sharing. But at the same time I am very strongly against ISP's limiting bandwidth to applications such as bittorrent just to put a cap on its usage. I also am very much against ISP's giving priority to their services and restricting the speed of a competitors internet offerings. For example setting up a deal with Yahoo to limit the speed that Google loads