

To whomever it may concern:

I feel it is necessary to share my personal views about net neutrality.

By allowing internet providers to allocate bandwidth, I feel that the possibility of corporate and governmental censorship is too great to allow. It seems as though that one of these entities could effectively block access to certain sites by limiting their bandwidth allocations. It may sound far-fetched, but I fear allowing providers to determine who gets the biggest slice of the pie, so to speak.

The day should not, nay, must not come to pass when the internet is tiered and put further under control of corporate interests. In order for our world to advance socially and technologically, the internet must remain free.
