

As minute and insignificant as I may seem, I am a registered voter and a taxpayer. I feel that it is my right to continue to use the internet without being held by some sort of corporate greed.

I would therefore like to add my opinion to those in favor of continuing Net Neutrality. I am not sure how much effect this will have on the congressional or bureaucratic decisions, but I will say that the only voices against Net Neutrality are those of the corporations it will benefit.

So many of the older generation wonder why it is that most of the younger generation do not want to vote, or involve themselves with politics in any way.

This proposal, to sell the internet to the highest bidder, may very well be part of the apathy that has spread across the country. The internet is our forum for the future; it will be the ground on which the U.S., and the world, will operate.

In short, it is my belief that to end Network Neutrality would be comparable to this government choosing the wants of corporations over the will of the people.

Thank you.
