

Fact 1. Telcos rely almost entirely on public easements to run their business.

Fact 2. Lack of public land would destroy almost all current Telcos.

Thus, putting Fact 1 and Fact 2 together, to me, means that the Telcos serve me first before they serve their shareholders.

If they want everything deregulated so they can charge more for "premium delivered" bandwidth or whatever their current term-du-jour is, they can alter their business such that they do not rely on public funds or land to build their business.
