

Whoever owns the last mile (even when there are multiple methods of reaching the user, e.g., cable, dsl, satellite) should not be permitted to regulate the content or services delivered over that method, and further, should be required to sell/lease/rent use of that medium at a competitive rate to all other organizations.

To re-phrase, the last-mile to the customer should be regulated carefully (and preferably owned and operated by an independent, not-for-profit entity) to ensure significant competition between services offered over that last-mile medium.