

The debate of Internet neutrality should be decided upon what is best for the smallest business on the internet, to foster competition and capitalism. Decisions that may impact adversely internet businesses that make $100 to $100,000 per year should be weight with serious consideration. The internet gives the opportunity for anyone with extremely low investment to voice their opinion, distribute information, or do business.

If the USA does not support this concept, other countries will, and USA will have yet another ingrained deterrent for innovation.

I implore that the FCC take it's responsibility to represent the people not the Corporations of America. Any decisions made will be utilized in it's fullest capacity to benefit the ISP and not the end-user. It is in the interest of everyone to fully exploit laws to their gain, and not for the benefit of everyone.