

As an early netizen and American Citizen, I believe the Internet should be regulated to protect the American Citizen and encourage a level playing ground. Net Neutrality, or the passing of packets by ISP's and Network Providers without bandwidth throttling or packet rejection based upon origin or destination of the packet is critical for the continued development of the Internet into a global economic engine. If the several corporations are allowed to make their own policys regarding the transmissions of communications the virtual monopoly these same corporations will have over all communications is contrary to the interests of the American People. You as our authority vested by the American people to regulate and administrate our communications must act to protect the little people from the giant corp.

Yours Truely

Richard Schellenberg