

Dear FCC review team,

I would like to say that the merger of Sirius and XM sat-radio is a good thing for consumers for several reasons:

1. Two companies will finally stop spending investors money to fight each other and will be able to spend the dollars against real competition like FM radio and companies like Apple. The thing is that since 1997, a lot changed in the high tech industry and in the 21 century, the age of digital media and storage everyone is competing for the content. So it does not matter if there will be only one sat-radio since the real issue is content delivery to consumers and all would love the choices offered by a combined company. This should be a simple decision for you and you should approve since millions of consumers are asking you to do this and after all you're trying to protect consumer interests.

At the end of the day, if you don't approve one of the companies will be forced out of business and this will have a huge impact on investors who are also consumers of the services. Please stop the non-sense about monopoly since this is not an essential service such as food or water. People want this sat-radio because it is better than anything else out there. This is the reason some many in regular radio are trying to fight against the merger.

Therefore, you will need to approve the merger.
