Dear FCC:

I've been a Sirius subscriber for close to 3 years now. It was one of the best purchases I have ever made. However, I recall the dilemma I had before I decided to go with Sirius and not XM. I'm a huge sports fan, especially the NBA and MLB. As you may be aware, Sirius has exclusive rights to NBA programming, and XM has rights to MLB programming.

As a sports fan of out of town teams, I love listening to the games of my favorite sports teams that I'm unable to receive on a local AM or FM station.

But it was extremely difficult to decide if I rather listen to NBA games or MLB games. If the merger were to be completed, I would be able to listen to both.

Obviously price is a concern, and agree that the price shouldn't increase after the merger. I can't see how it would be able to if they intend to keep the business alive. They are competing with free forms of media such as AM/FM radios. Many people also have iPods and cell phones. As well as TV.

I see no reason why the merger should be prohibited. The combined market share of audio entertainment is very little for the combined company. I think consumers want it and seek better programming than what is offered in traditional mediums.

Sincerely,

Sai Lee
