

I'm writing as a satellite radio consumer. I'm a Sirius subscriber, and I find the proposed merger between XM and Sirius to be of great concern. I enjoy having competing companies that will, in my opinion, keep costs down and keep quality high. I'm deathly afraid that if merged, they will begin to increase costs, cut back on service, programming, quality programming, and start to charge extra for particular channels. There is NO legitimate reason for these two to be merged. They agreed in the beginning that there should be at least two companies now. What has changed?!?! I think it is greed.
