

Net Neutrality is essential for proper education

The FCC was established to regulate the media in ways to disallow reporters to misconstrue facts, and preserve the integrity of newscast by giving as little bias interpretations of events. The FCC seems to attempt to extend their jurisdiction beyond that today.

In the attempt to disfranchise a free reign of information exchange seems to be an overreaction. I believe that major news sources should be regulated in the same way that they are in a television newscast, but third party newscast should be untouched; allow me to explain.

Third party sources are presented by the academic environment as an improper sources and usually lack good journalistic credibility. It is nothing more than free exchange, much like a real life conversation, using the internet as the medium. To me, regulatory standards on third party free exchange sites are blatant violations on our first amendment rights, and despite its intent it is also unethical.

I am aware that as a student I am on the low end of the totem pole, but I ask all of you to reconsider, and reassess the potential harm of these regulations.
