Dear FCC:

I am a current subscriber to SIRIUS and it's quite annoying that to listen to Major League Baseball games I have to pay another $13 to listen to XM. This is something that would not be allowed with the cable systems, and if it can be rectified on my satellite radio it should be.

The merger will provide subscribers of either service with many more channels to listen to. Since both companies share similar expenses, the reduced costs will prevent their prices from going up. If for some reason they do, people will simply not pay it as there are other mediums vying for our attention. This is not a service people need to live such as water, food, and housing, it is simply entertainment that helps me and many others get through their day.

Thanks for your time
