

The Internet Inspired My Course In Life

The simple premise of not having net neutrality seems contradictory to what this country stands for. I cannot fathom how differently my life would have played out -- and will play out -- without the Internet we have today. I decided during high school to pursue online journalism, and have invested all of my resources into learning all that I can about doing just that. It's what I've been planning my life around for years now, and suddenly that is in jeopardy due to the greed of these companies.