

Restore Net Neutrality to the Internet

The Internet is the most democratic avenue of expression the people of the United States have today. It is vital as a means of discussion and organizing action on the pressing issues of the day. Anything that gives some parties greater power to put out their messages is a mortal threat to this most essential function of the Internet.

Net Neutrality is vital to keeping the net an open medium. The Internet belongs to the people of the United States -- to all the people. It is (in my firm opinion) your responsibility to restore the principle of Net Neutrality so that the power of money cannot usurp the power of "We the people."

Richard L. Pollak