

Let the Knowledge Be Known

Without the internet, education would not be where it is today. It opens up new gateways for other students like myself, and it gives us even more resources to fill our brains with the knowledge we yearn for. If the internet is censored, all we would be reading is bias.

The internet also helps me to connect with family and friends from across the country. Having access to the internet helps me stay close with my family and friends that have moved away, or are studying abroad in other countries.

It also helps entrepreneurs, like myself, to broaden their horizon and to be able to get their product all over the world in a faster, timelier manner. Sales over the internet help with our economy, because more money is flowing through our system. Having the internet helps to inform people of what is out there, and what they could have; it helps to create a demand for the products that are out there.
