

Viva net neutrality!

No tolls on the internet! I depend on information from so many sites, and enjoy browsing countless others referred to me by friends.

An open and free internet is essential to the free flow of information. What would happen if broadband providers could interfere or discriminate with that free flow. What would happen if small websites had access limited by fees, which could drive them out of business. There are already plenty of people making money off the internet without installing toll booths. Let's leave it at that...
