

Inernet saves fuel and pollution for job hunter

Net Neutrality is essential to free speech, equal opportunity and economic innovation in America. Since the FCC removed this basic protection in 2005, the top executives of phone and cable companies have stated their intention to become the Internet's gatekeepers and to discriminate against Web sites that don't pay their added tolls.

This fundamental change would end the open Internet as we know it. It would damage my ability to connect with others, share information and participate in our 21st century democracy and economy. The FCC must ensure that broadband providers do not block, interfere with or discriminate against any lawful Internet traffic based on its ownership, source or destination. With the "freenet" there is a feeling of true freedom like being able to fly like a bird and being able to see the entire world without restrictions, passports, extra cost or having to stand in line. It truly is a place where freedom of speech, ideas and comrodery is expected, not stymied. If controlled by a filter such as a cash driven corporate entity we would lose the creativeness because of the constraints of pay to play mentality which is helping to divide this great country. This is an American reality that helps us all to soar evenly through out the world and discuss goals we share. But perhaps the most troubling thing the corporate controls would stop is the flow of free information we need to know that the corporate media doesn't want us to know. For a good example look at the protections this current rightwing neocon administration and its corporate allies. If only congress would have tuned in would there have been an Iraq attack? In my why of thinking turning the freenet over to any large corporation would be like the Nazis take over of German freepress before WWII. Besides I do not want another damn product or the right(s) to that is as American as Abe Lincoln to be sold to any high bidder from any other country or individual. And the latter is what would happen in today's greedy corporate world the rush to sell off any and all things shared or common in America for profit.
