

I have seen other wireless networks around the world and I am shocked that the U.S. is as far behind as it is from the rest of the wireless markets.

I partially blame the FCC for not insuring an open and fair market that supports innovation and economy.

Instead, the wireless market is dominated by large corporations that, for the most part, have kept our communication tools less advanced than the rest of the world.

I urge an open and free wireless world, based on open access and one that does away with monopolies, supported by our government and by agencies, such as the FCC.

Thank you,

Eli Hollander

Professor, Film and Digital Media